KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM AND OLD BRIDGE OF URR.

KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM is a small village in the parish of its name, 85 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, 14 s. e. of New Galloway, 13 w. of Dumfries, 7 e. of Parton, and 6 n. of Castle Douglas; situate on a streamlet that falls into the Urr. The parish, which is skit ted by the Urr water on its western side, derives its name from the old church dedicated to St. Patrick, and Durham, a hamlet where it stood—the latter appellation signifying the 'hamlet on the water.' Formerly, a woollen mill furnished employment to many inhabitants of the village, but it is now undistinguished by manufactures of any kind, and is a place of no trade but that which belongs to a few shops for the reciprocal accommodation of the inhabitants. The parish, which is between nine and ten miles in length, and about four miles in breadth, is partly pastoral and partly arable; the former character prevailing in the north, the latter in the south of the district. One annual fair is held on the first Thursday after the 17th of March, old style.

OLD BRIDGE OF URR is a small village in the parish of Kirkpatrick-Durham, two miles therefrom, seated on the banks of Urr Water; it contains only a few houses, and a small dying establishment.

NEW ABBEY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

NEW ABBEY is a small village in the parish of its name, 80 miles s. of Edinburgh, 12 e. of Dalbeattie, and 7 s. by w. of Dumfries, situate at the eastern extremity of the county, near to the mouth of the Nith. The parish, which was originally called Kirkinder, takes its present name from the once celebrated religious establishment of New Abbey, a monastery founded in the thirteenth century, for the Cistercian order of monks, by Dovegilla, daughter of Alan, lord of Galloway, niece to David, Earl of Huntingdon, spouse to John Baliol, lord of Castle Barnard, and mother of John Baliol, the imbecile competitor for the crown. The village derives its chief, indeed its only consequence, from the contiguity of the ruins of this once important religious establishment. From the dimensions of the abbey and church, as given by Grose, they must have been of great magnitude. Although much dilapidated for the sake of the stones, the remains of the structure are still very extensive, and form an interesting object of research to the antiquarian, while the beauty of the surrounding scenery is well calculated to gratify the most fastidious taste. On the north and south lie the woods of Shambelly, and on the south Loch Kindar, and the dark braes of Criffell, the lofty hill of which rises to the height of 2,000 feet above the sea, from which it is a mile distant. Besides that of Kindar, there are two other lakes in the parish, namely, Lochend and Craigend. The parish kirk stands on the south side of the abbey church, having been formed of that part of the ruins. In the village is a Roman catholic chapel and the parochial school.

NEW GALLOWAY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BALMACLELLAN, DALRY, AND CARSPHAIRN.

NEW GALLOWAY is a small town and royal burgh, in the parish of Kells; 84 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, 25 w. of Dumfries, 18 n. e. of Newton Stewart, 14 n. w. of Castle Douglas, and 8 n. w. of Parton; pleasantly situate on the west bank of the river Ken, over which, in the year 1822, an elegant stone bridge of five arches was erected; this structure, lying in the valley below the town, has a very pleasing effect: at its completion a dinner was given, by Lord Viscount Kenmore, to fourteen of the oldest inhabitants of the town, whose united ages amounted to 1,264 years. The houses of the town stretch along the public road, and form a single tolerably well-built street; the business of the place is confined to the local domestic retail and handicraft branches. Its burghal charter was conferred by Charles I, and the municipal government vested in a provost, two bailies, and fifteen councillors. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday in every month, for the recovery of debts under £5; attached to the court is a criminal and debtors' gaol, with a steeple and town clock. The burgh unites with Wigtown, Stranraer and Wlithorn in returning a member to parliament. On the north side of the town, within the distance of half a mile, is the parish church, a neat stone edifice, with a square tower in the centre, built in 1822; in the same year a Sunday-school was established, in which upwards of one hundred children are gratuitously taught by the inhabitants. At a short distance south of the town stands the ancient castle of Kenmore, once a place of considerable strength; Mary Queen of Scots lodged in it one night, on her way from this country to England. Loch Ken, which joins the town, is four miles and a half long, and in many places more than a mile broad; it abounds with pike and perch, and some of the former have been caught of the astonishing weight of 50 and 60 lbs. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday after the 12th of April, the first Wednesday after the 12th of July, the first Wednesday after the 12th of August, and the first Wednesday after the 12th of November.

DALRY is rather a populous village, in the parish of its name, lying on the east bank of the river Ken: the southern portion of the district is situate in a beautiful valley, composed of rich arable land; the high grounds are pastoral, and graze considerable numbers of cattle and sheep. The village of Dalry (the name of which signifies 'the dale of the king') is surrounded with delightful scenery. There are several lakes in the parish; the largest, called Loch Invar, covers an area of fifty acres: in the lake stand the remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to the Gordons, Knights of Lochinvar, and latterly Viscounts of Kenmure. Besides Dalry, there is a small village in the parish, called John's Clachan, agreeably situate on the margin of the Ken. The population of Dalry village amounts to about six hundred.

CARSPHAIN village, which is situate near the river Deogh, contains a neat parish kirk, the manse, a pa-

LANARKSHIRE,

OR, as it is sometimes designated, CLYDESDALE, is a large, populous, and highly important manufacturing county, in the western part of the Lowlands, or south division of Scotland; bounded by Dumfries-shire on the south, the counties of Ayr and Renfrew on the west, those of Dumbarton and Stirling on the north, Linlithgowshire and Edinburghshire on the south-east, and Peebles on the east. Its extreme length (from south-south-east to north-north-west) is somewhat more than fifty miles, and its greatest breadth in the middle (from east to west) is thirty-two miles; it includes within its area 942 square miles of land, and three square miles of lakes; about one-half of the entire is calculated to be under cultivation. At an early period this extensive district was for convenience divided into two wards, called the Over Ward and the Nether Ward—Lanark being the chief town and seat of justice of the former, and Rutherglen of the latter: this arrangement was altered during the last century, when the county was divided into three wards, namely, the Upper, Nether, and Middle Wards—the chief towns being Glasgow, Lanark and Hamilton, and each district subject to the jurisdiction of a sheriff-substitute. The central part of the county throughout is termed Clydesdale, or the vale of Clyde, from being the basin of that beautiful and useful river, of which we shall say more hereafter. This district, recognized as the Vale of Clyde, with its minor vales, at the time at which Roman writers described North Britain, was inhabited by the British tribe called the Damni; a people who designated their territory Y-Stradclayd, signifying 'the warm vale' or strath: these hardy Britons or Celts yielded to the Roman yoke towards the end of the first century, and the country became a part of the province of Valentia. A few centuries later (after the abandonment of Albion by the Romans), the kingdom of Strath-Clyde involved within its limits Liddisdale, Tiviotdale, Dumfries-shire, all Galloway, Ayrshire, Renfrewshire, Strath-Clyde proper, part of Peebles-shire, the western part of Stirlingshire, and the greater part of Dumbartonshire; from which it seems to have been a kingdom including nearly the whole of Scotland south of the Forth, with the exception of ancient Lothian, which was inhabited by Ottadini, and afterwards by Saxons. On the political union of the Picts and Scots in 844, through the intrepidity of Kenneth, all appearance of a separate kingdom in Strath-Clyde disappeared. The extinction of the Saxon power north of the Tweed, in 1020, consolidated for the first time the Scottish dynasty, and levelled many trifling distinctions among the inhabitants of the country. Throughout the arduous struggle for Scottish independence, Lanark was the theatre of many miseries and military excesses. Under the reign of James I, a portion of the county was taken from it, and formed into the district of Renfrew. At a subsequent date the turbulence of the Douglases, with the intrigues of the first Lord Hamilton, involved Lanarkshire in the various calamities consequent upon intestine warfare; it subsequently became subject to a thirty years' civil commotion, stimulated by the persecution of the more zealous presbyterians of this district by Charles I: the revolution of 1688, however, was the harbinger of a more tranquil future, and it has ever since advanced in wealth and every species of improvement.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, CLIMATE, &c.—The upper division of the county is very mountainous; from Tinto looking northwards, the face of the country is softened down to gentle elevations and gradual depressions. The Upper Ward, which may be deemed three-fifths of the county, is mostly hilly and moorish; and, from the nature of the soil and the altitude of the surface, cannot be considered susceptible of much agricultural improvement. At the commencement of the Middle Ward the elevation of the land is obviously diminished, while the declivity continues descending towards the north-west; the surface is everywhere diversified by frequent inequalities, so as to leave no level space except the valleys along the river: indeed the Middle Ward, though esteemed a good agricultural district, is nearly one-third moss land. The Lower Ward is of very limited extent, and derives its justly acquired importance from being the seat of a most abundant population. The commencement of improvement in soil and cultivation, in this part of Scotland, was not apparent until about the middle or nearer the end of the eighteenth century: from this period, draining, planting and enclosing took place in various districts; wheat, barley and oats (the two latter more abundantly), are produced from different soils in the county; potatoes are planted in considerable quantities; turnips are sown pretty generally, and artificial grasses are profusely raised in every direction: some flax is likewise grown, which is spun by females, who dispose of the yarn in the markets of Lanark, Biggar, Carnwath and other places. Gardens and orchards occupy many acres of land, particularly on the banks of the Clyde; in this part they are of the most luxuriant growth, the orchards consisting chiefly of apple, pear and plum trees. The inhabitants of the inland and upland districts breed and graze great numbers of black cattle and sheep. In mineral productions, Lanarkshire is, perhaps, the richest in Scotland. Gold, to an important amount, was at an early period found in this county; and in later days, on the sides of a rivulet called the Wenlock, small pieces of that precious metal, in a pure state, have frequently been picked up from among the sand and soil brought down by the torrents from the precipices and slopes of the mountains; particles of gold have also been found in Crawford Muir, with some large pieces of lapis lazuli: in the reign of James VI, Cornelius, a German alchemist, discovered at Crawford John, in the upper part of Clydesdale, a gold mine, from whence he sent half a stone of virgin metal to the mint at Edinburgh. At present, plentiful supplies of lead may be had in Crawford; and coal, ironstone, limestone, freestone, sandstone, whinstone, fire-clay, and a variety of other metallic, mineral and fossil substances are to be obtained abundantly in different districts of the county: the lead mines, belonging to the Marquess of Queensberry and the Earl of Hopetoun, afford employment and maintenance to many thousands of people. GLASGOW being the paramount seat of the MANUFACTURES for which Lanarkshire is so eminently distinguished, it is unnecessary in this article to treat of the subject at any length, as under the head of that most important city unsparing notice will be taken of whatever is connected with its commerce and products: it need only be mentioned, in this place, that the cotton goods for which Glasgow is the vast depository are, to a very considerable extent, woven in different villages and parishes in the county; and that this branch of manufacture alone yields support to a very large proportion of the dense population. The CLIMATE of Lanarkshire is of a moist and cold character—a circumstance partly attributable to the proximity of the western seas, but mainly to the very extensive masses of wet peat earth which in many districts still disfigure the surface and chill the atmosphere of the county; within the more sheltered and sunny vale through which the Clyde pursues its cheerful course, the temperature upon the whole is much more genial—for, while the wind rushes with a keen damp blast over the waste dispiriting moors of the exposed country, at a very short distance, within the protection of the rich descending slopes towards the banks of the river, the air has all the blandful mildness of a more southern summer. The progress of drainage has contributed materially to the amelioration of the climate, and a perseverance in this system must be attended with still more agreeable results.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS, &c.—The principal river is the noble and pre-eminently useful CLYDE, which is formed by the concentration of a number of straggling burns and rivulets, rising amidst the mountains and issuing from the waters which separate Lanarkshire from the counties of Peebles and Dumfries. The chief of these tributaries are the Powtrail water, the Crook burn, and the Evan and Elvan waters; these, coalescing, compose a stream that, after flowing about two miles, receives an accession, first from Glengonar water, and next from Duneaton water, which constitute it properly the river Clyde, at a distance of upwards of twelve miles from the highest springs of its fountain. The Clyde flows in a longitudinal direction, in a winding course of more than sixty miles, dividing the county into two nearly equal parts; and ultimately falls into the Frith of Clyde, opposite to the Isle of Bute. It ranks amongst the largest rivers of Scotland, and is navigable for vessels of considerable burden as far as the city of Glasgow; it waters and conduces to the fertility of delightful valleys, and in its progress forms several falls and cascades of a picturesque and romantic character—particularly the 'Falls of Clyde,' which, with the beautiful scenery around, possess an almost irresistibly attractive influence in the minds and over the feelings of visitors for pleasure, and admirers of natural loveliness. On either side, the grand river receives a variety of tributaries, all of them respectively of important advantage in their application to the machinery of manufacturing and agricultural mills: the most prominent of these secondary rivers, within the shire, are the DOUGLAS water, the MOUSE, the NETHAN, the AVEN, the CALDER, the NORTH CALDER, and the KELVIN; there are other minor streams, of still less magnitude and consequence, as the Elwin, the Little Clyde, the Cotten, the Logan, and the Avon. The greatest elevations of this county, with their altitude above the level of the sea, are—the Lowther Hills, 2,450 feet; Tinto, 2,236; Culter Fell, 1,700; Welstoun Mount, 1,550; Leven Seat, 1,250; and Dickmount Hill, 700.

Lanarkshire comprises (including the city parishes of Glasgow) forty-nine parishes and two parts of parishes, which form four presbyteries in the synod of Glasgow and Ayr; it contains three Royal Burghs—GLASGOW, LANARK, and RUTHERGLEN. The county returns one representative to the imperial legislature; the city of GLASGOW elects two members; and the royal burgh of LANARK, in conjunction with Hamilton and Airdrie, in this county—Linlithgow, in the county of that name—and Falkirk, in Stirlingshire, contributes another member.

TOTAL POPULATION OF LANARKSHIRE . . . . .							147732	191752	244387	316719	146144

Note.—(a) The increase in the city of Glasgow is deficient, inasmuch as no returns appear for the parishes of St. James and St. John for the years 1801 and 1811.

(b) The increase in the parishes of Cathcart and Dalserf, for thirty years, cannot be here exhibited, no returns having been made from them for this county in 1801; the increase in Cathcart, however, will be seen by referring to Renfrew, in which county it is chiefly situate: the whole parish contained, in 1831, 2,282 inhabitants.

(c) Govan parish is partly in Renfrewshire; the entire parish now contains 5,677 inhabitants: but if the population be taken according to its former boundary (in 1801 and 1811,) it will contain 19,170—the difference of these numbers being added to Gorbals, in 1821 and 1831, as a suburb of Glasgow.

+ The population of the parishes of Cathcart, Dalserf, St. James, and St. John, in 1831, must be added to the increase column, in order to make the columns for 1801 and 1831 correspond.

The total annual value of Real Property, in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £686,531.

AIRDRIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

AIRDRIE is a thriving town, one of considerable manufactures, and a burgh of barony, in the parish of East Monkland; 18 miles N. N. E. of Lanark, 31 miles W. of Edinburgh, and 11 E. of Glasgow; eligibly situated on the great or middle road between the two cities, and occupying a rising ground with its principal slope to the west. The advance of Airdrie has been very rapid, and it is now one of the most flourishing inland towns in Scotland: somewhat more than a century ago it consisted of but two or three farm-houses; at present it numbers nine thousand inhabitants—and it is daily increasing in consequence, wealth, and population, from the inexhaustible mines of ironstone and coal with which the neighbourhood abounds. The country is intersected in every direction with rail-roads, for the transmission of coals, &c., to the various iron-works, and to Glasgow; with which city, also, and the intermediate places, a communication is maintained by a passengers' train five times a day; and the Monkland canal approaches within a mile and a half of the town. The Calder iron-works are situate about a mile and a half to the south-west, and the Monkland Steel Company's two miles and a half to the south. Exclusive of the iron and coal works, which employ a great many hands, no inconsiderable number are occupied in weaving for the manufacturers in Glasgow, as well as in the Airdrie cotton-works of Messrs. Chapman and Co.; brewing and distilling are likewise carried on extensively by an establishment in each business. A branch of the Bank of Scotland, and one of the National Bank, are settled here; the inns are respectable, and the shops for general supply are well stored with every necessary article for the demand of a busy population. The burgh consists of one long principal street, through which the public road passes, with several branching and side streets and bye lanes; it is built on a regular plan, has many excellent houses, and is lighted with gas. It possesses a handsome new town-hall, which is ornamented with a spire and a clock; in the hall a justice of peace court sits, on the last Tuesday of each month, for the despatch of district business, and the bailies' court every Monday. The increase of the town led to its being erected into a burgh of barony in 1821; and it is now governed by a regular bench of magistrates, composed of a provost, three bailies and twelve councillors, with a treasurer and town-clerk: it unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Linlithgow and Falkirk in returning a member to parliament. A new church, erected in 1834, is a neat structure, and affords worship accommodation for the inhabitants of the western division of the parish; the other religious edifices, with the ministers officiating, are named in a subsequent page. There are several useful and benevolent institutions in Airdrie; amongst these is an orphan society, for clothing and educating twenty-four children. In the neighbourhood are many neat modern villas and handsome residences; Airdrie House, a short distance to the west of the town, stands amidst some fine pleasure-grounds. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday; fairs are held on the second Tuesday of February, the last Tuesday of May, and the third Tuesdays of August and November.

 w. of Peebles, and 11 s. e. of Lanark, situate on the

 which consists principally of a spacious and tolerably neatly built main street, was created a baronial burgh by charter of James II, to Sir Robert Fleming, of Big-gar, in the fifteenth century. The chief employment of the inhabitants is weaving for the Glasgow houses.

In 1545, Malcolm Lord Fleming founded and endowed a collegiate church here for a provost, eight prebends, four singing boys and six poor men; it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and built in the form of a cross, in a plain Gothic style: this ancient place of worship is now the parish church, and is the only object worthy of attracting the notice of the stranger. Tradition reports a bloody engagement to have taken place near this town, betwixt the Scots, under Wallace, and the English army, when that distinguished leader drove the latter into a morass, where most of them perished.

 The parish is six miles in length by three and a half in breadth, having the river Clyde on its western bound-

BLANTYRE AND CAMBUSLANG.

BLANTYRE is a small ancient village in the parish of its name; eight miles N. by E. from Glasgow, and between three and four from Hamilton; situate on the road between the last-named town and Kilbride, and in a rich fertile district in the middle ward of the shire—the parish having a front to the Clyde of about two miles and a half, and extending six miles in length. In the village are very extensive cotton-mills belonging to Messrs. Henry Monteith and Co., which employ many hands, and is the only branch of manufacture in the district; with the mills is connected a sabbath-day school, under the patronage of the Company. In the parish is a spring strongly impregnated with sulphur; the water is of a similar quality to that of St. Bernard's well, near Edinburgh; it was formerly much resorted to, and is still efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and scorbutic cases. On the south bank of the Clyde, directly opposite to Bothwell Castle, on a rocky eminence, stand the ruins of the once splendid priory of Blantyre, founded early in the thirteenth century: at the reformation the priory was demolished, and its revenues, with the patronage of the parish church, were given by James VI to Walter Stewart, afterwards lord treasurer of Scotland, and created a baron in 1606, with the title of Lord Blantyre. The family is distinguished in Scottish and British history; Major-General Lord Blantyre, one of its members, was unfortunately slain in the popular tumults in Brussels, in 1830.

CAMBUSLANG is a small parish, about three miles square, lying on the west bank of the Clyde, with Blantyre on the east, Kilbride on the south, and Rutherglen on the west. The kirk, which is about four miles and a half from Glasgow and six from Hamilton, prior to the reformation belonged to a prebend of Glasgow cathedral: there also was, at that time, a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary; in 1565, the chaplain, Sir John Miller, made grants of the property endowed for its support; these lands are still called 'Chapel lands.'

CADDER, OLD MONKLAND, PARKHEAD, TOLLCROSS, AND SHETTLESTON.

THE parish of CADDER (or CALDER) extends along the northern boundary of Lanarkshire, having Kirkintulloch on the east, New Kilpatrick on the west, Campsie on the north, and the barony parish of Glasgow on the south: being in the immediate vicinity of the latter city, it has become the residence of many of its wealthy merchants and manufacturers, and other respectable families. Great improvements have been made in this district in agriculture; this progressive benefit has been accelerated by the great canal between the Forth and the Clyde, which passes through the parish for five miles, whilst the river Kelvin washes its northern boundary to the extent of six miles. The Glasgow and Airrie railway, and the Monkland and Kirkintulloch line, also traverse the parish; and these, together with the discovery of coal on the estates of Cadder and Garnkirk, have had the effect of materially enhancing the price of land in this quarter. At Robroyston, on the 13th September, 1303, that implacable opponent of the first Edward's tyranny, Sir William Wallace, was betrayed into the power of that monarch through the jealousy of the Scottish lords.

OLD MONKLAND parish extends from the right bank of the Clyde to the border of New Monkland; a distance of between seven and eight miles, by a breadth, near the Clyde, of little more than one, but afterwards expanding to nearly four miles. It is bounded on the north by Cadder and the barony parish of Glasgow, and on the south by Bothwell. This is, perhaps, one of the most productive and beautiful parishes in Lanarkshire: it is well enclosed, cultivated, and finely

CARLUKE AND BRAIDWOOD.

CARLUKE is a small town and burgh of harony in the parish of its name, 32 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 20 s. e. of Glasgow, 10 s. e. of Hamilton, and 5 n. w. of Lanark. The parish, which lies on the north-east bank of the Clyde, is said to derive its name from St. Luke, to whom its old parish church was dedicated—the adjacent Car signifying a strength or castle; the former was ruinous before the reformation, and of the latter no traces remain to mark its site. The town contains several regular streets which are lighted with gas, from works erected in the neighbourhood two years since. To induce a disposition for order and cleanliness in the dwellings of the humbler class, W. Lockhart, esq., of Milton Lockhart, bestows, with a judicious liberality, an annual prize of two guineas to the occupier of whose cottage in the parish exhibits the greatest neatness; and half the amount to the second in merit. Few districts are richer in the minerals of coal, ironstone and limestone, than that of Carluke. In 1836-7 extensive works were erected by the Shotts Iron Company; they are situate about a mile north from the town, and consist of four blast furnaces, with steam engines in connexion, of the aggregate power of two hundred horses. The coal, ironstone and limestone are respectively of the very best quality. Exclusive of the mining operations, employment is found by other of the inhabitants in weaving and in agriculture, and many females are occupied in sewing muslins for the Glasgow manufacturers. A branch of the British Linen Company's Bank is settled in the town; and provident habits are encouraged among

CARNWATH is a village (or small town) and burgh of baiony, in the parish of its name; 25 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, 27 e. s. e. of Glasgow, 7 n. of Biggar, and the same distance e. of Lanark; situate on the main road between the latter town and Edinburgh. It consists of one street, nearly half a mile in length; about the centre is the tolbooth, a plain old building, in front of which is the cross, an obelisk, whereon the distances from Edinburgh to various places in Clydesdale and Ayrshire are distinctly marked. The houses, which are neat slate-roofed dwellings, have considerably augmented in number of late years. The inhabitants are employed, some in hand-loom weaving and others in agriculture. Sir N. M'Donald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee and Carnwath, is superior of the burgh; Mr. S. Gray, of Lanark, writer, is the baron bailie. The estate is held of the crown, on payment of a pair of red hose, which is ran for annually on the day succeeding the August fair, and is followed by athletic games, to the successful competitors for superiority in which are awarded medals and prizes in money. The parish library, which is an extensive and well-selected collection of works, is superintended by a committee. The church, a modern erection, stands at the western end of the town, contiguous to a fragment of the ancient edifice, which, prior to the reformation, belonged to the cathedral of Glasgow: the stone frame of the north window is still entire, and presents a fine specimen of masonry in the Gothic style; another portion of the old building is now used as a sepulchre by the Lockhart family; it contains the remains of the former lords of the manor, the Somervilles, and a tomb ou which a Lord Somerville is represented lying in complete armour, along with the figure of his wife, in the exact costume of the fifteenth century. About a mile to the north-west of Carnwath are the shattered ruins of Cowdailly Castle, in former ages the seat of the Somervilles. The market, which is on Friday, is principally for meal. Fairs are held on the last Friday of March (new style), for hiring servants; the first Thursday of July (old style), for horses and cattle; the second Wednesday of August (old style), for horses, cattle and sheep; and the second Wednesday of November (old style), for hiring servants. The population of Carnwath town is about eleven hundred. WILSONTOWN (or Wilsonton) is a village in the parish of Carnwath, six miles north-west from that town. It was erected by the Messrs. Wilson, of London (who gave it their name), to accommodate the workmen employed in their extensive iron-works here, which are on the plan of those at Carron; they are now in the occupation of Messrs. Dixon and Co. Perhaps no similar works in Britain possess the advantage of having the materials of coal, ironstone, limestone and fire-clay so near at hand, and in such great abundance; these minerals are supposed to extend, likewise, beneath the entire surface of this wide-spread parish. The population of the village amounts to about six hundred. CARSTAIRS is a small village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Edinburgh to Lanark, four miles east of the latter town, and three west of Carnwath. This was evidently a place of some consequence in the time of the Romans, from the number and magnitude of architectural and other remains of that people which have frequently been turned up when digging below the surface. The cottages of this rural village have a remarkably neat appearance, being tastefully adorned with shrubs and flowers at the expense of the proprietor of the place. At some short distance from the village, embosomed in thriving plantations, is Carstairs House, the family mansion of Monteith, of Carstairs. The three fairs which were formerly held here, having gradually declined, are now altogether discontinued.

DOUGLAS, DOUGLAS MILL, AND RIGSIDE.

DOUGLAS, a village of great antiquity, is 40 miles s.w. of Edinburgh, 31 s. s. e. of Glasgow, 15 n. of Leadhills, 12 s. of Lanark, and 8 s. of Lesmahago; situate nearly in the centre of the parish of its name, on the south side of the Douglas water, and on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. The parish of Douglas takes its name from the stream that flows through it—the British words Dhu glas signifying 'the dark blue stream;' and this is descriptive of the colour of the water, which is tinged with the dark moisture of the mossy uplands. From such an etymology is derived the once dreaded and still noble name of Douglas—[Of this ancient family copious and interesting particulars will be found in Messrs. Chambers' 'Gazetteer']. In the vicinity of the village, on the bank of the river, stands Douglas Castle, surrounded by extensive plantations: of this cheering and ornamental feature to the land, upwards of eighteen hundred acres received the scions from the late and nearly seven hundred from the present Lord Douglas. The old castle of Douglas was burnt down in the year 1760; the following year the present edifice was begun to be erected in a magnificent style, from a plan by the late architect Adam; but only a part of the original splendid design has as yet been completed.

The village consists of several narrow irregular streets, formed (without any regard to order) on uneven ground; near the centre, in the village burial-place, stand all that remains of the ancient parish church: in a vault belonging to the original structure are to be seen monuments of some of the great chiefs of the house of Douglas; several of these highly merit the investigation of the curious in sepulchral sculpture. The parish throughout is well stored with limestone, freestone, and coal; of the latter mineral there are inexhaustible seams, many of which are seven feet thick. The district is well watered: besides the Douglas, there are three minor streams, which merge in that river previous to its falling into the Clyde, about seven miles below the village. Fairs are held on the third Friday of March, the first Friday after Whitsuntide, the third Friday in October, and the first Friday after Martinmas, for hiring servants; the second Wednesday of June, for shearers; and the second Friday of August, for horses, of which there is always a large show. In the year 1834, the population of the village amounted to about 1,340

DOUGLAS MILL is chiefly to be noticed for its well-known, respectable and commodious inn and posting-house, two miles from the village of Douglas, standing on the high roads from Glasgow to England and from Edinburgh to Ayr.

RIGSIDE is a small village in the parish of Douglas, two miles north therefrom, situate on the road from Edinburg to Ayr. In its neighbourhood are several collieries; the strata of this valuable mineral are of great thickness in this quarter, which also abounds with rich and productive beds of ironstone, limestone and fire-clay. Rigside village contains a chapel for a reformed presbyterian congregation, and a school, the latter erected in 1836 by Lord Douglas.

GLASGOW.

WITH GOVAN, PARTICK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

GLASGOW the 'Metropolis of the West,' as it is commonly designated in Scotland, is in the county of Lanark, situate on the banks of the Clyde; 397 miles from London, 44 from Edinburgh, 137 from Aberdeen, 34 from Ayr, 29 from Stirling, 213 from Manchester, the like distance from Liverpool, 95 from Carlisle, 196 from Dublin, and 127 from Belfast. This distinguished city, in addition to its other claims on our regard, is entitled to respect for its venerable age: nearly 1300 years it has already numbered, and, unlike the myriads of sons and daughters to whom it has given birth, its beauty and vigour have increased with the advance of its existence. St. Kentigern, or Mungo, was the reputed parent, who founded a bishopric on the site of the future city, in the year 560; the tomb of this saint is still shewn in the cathedral. John Achaius, who had been invested with the crosier about the year 1124, erected the present cathedral, which was consecrated in 1133. Some years after this, William the Lion elevated the rising town to the rank of a royal burgh, with the privilege of an eight days' fair and a weekly market. In 1268 the mace was borne before a provost and bailies, and a seal was allowed them distinct from that of the bishop and chapter. In 1345 Stockwell-street bridge was built, at the joint expense of Bishop Rae and Lady Lochow. Prior to this period the principal street was Drygate; some small tenements, near the head of this street, once formed part of the town-mansion of the noble family of Montrose: Rotten-row was then also one of the chief streets. In 1450 the city and barony of Glasgow were raised by James II, at the supplication of Bishop Turnbull, into a regality; in consequence of this proceeding, the bishops thenceforth obtained the nomination of the civil authorities. Bishop Turnbull next year induced Pope Nicholas V to issue a bull for the erection of a university: Rotten-row was the original site; but, eight years afterwards, Lord Hamilton bequeathed a tenement and four acres of land, on the north side of Blackfriars' church, where the college now stands. In 1484 the Tron church was built; this edifice was destroyed by fire in 1793. The endowment of the university contributed essentially to the enlargement of the town—yet, several years subsequently, the inhabitants did not exceed 1,500 in number; the majority resided in the neighbourhood of the cathedral and about the precincts of the bishop's palace; but as population increased, the habitations gradually extended towards the Cross. On the formation of the society of fishers, the Saltmarket soon gave convenient access to the Clyde; this humble community built Bridgegate (then called Fishergate), and appears to have been the first commercial company established in the city—fish, chiefly salmon, then being the staple of its trade. In 1527 the streets of Glasgow were stained with the blood of two martyrs to the principles of the reformation, Jeremiah Russell and John Kennedy, the latter a youth of eighteen years of age: their deaths rather accelerated than retarded the progress of the opinions they had avowed; forty-five years after that event, the high church was opened as a presbyterian place of worship; but in 1662, episcopacy being restored and enforced by the bayonet, the persecution of the presbyterians became as fierce as when impelled by the intolerance of popery; and an inscription on a stone placed in a wall beyond the infirmary records the names of three of its victims—James Nisbet, James Lawson and Alexander Wood, who, in 1684, were 'martyred for their adherence to the word of God and Scotland's covenanted reformation.' These sanguinary efforts to establish pre-eminence continued, with more or less violence, until the happy revolution gave permanence to the presbytery. In 1638 was made the first purchase of land for the formation of a public green; but it was not till 1773 that the entire plot (described elsewhere) became the property of the city. During the rebellion of 1715, the citizens of Glasgow displayed great zeal in the cause of the reigning family; they despatched six hundred men, at their own expense, to join the royal army; and a ditch round the town, twelve feet broad and six feet deep, was commenced, but (the evanescent spark of disloyalty having been quickly extinguished) was never completed. In 1763, James Watt, who was educated in Glasgow, withdrew to a private room near the Broomielaw, and during his seclusion, with a single assistant, commenced those experiments that issued in such momentous results; forty-nine years afterwards, the unpatronized Henry Bell, of Helensburgh, launched his little 'Comet' on the Clyde—the first steam-boat that vanquished its opposing wave. The 12th March, 1782, was memorable for the extraordinary height of the tide; the Clyde rose upwards of twenty feet above its usual mark, and completely insulated the village of Gorbals. In 1809 the battle of Corunna proved fatal to one of Glasgow's valiant sons, Sir John Moore; his statue now decorates George's-square; and in 1823 ample funds were subscribed for two other noble monuments that adorn the city, those of John Knox and James Watt. The gorgeous banquet given to Earl Grey, in 1832, in gratitude for the boon he conferred on Scotland by the reform bill, kindled extraordinary enthusiasm in the city; and the subsequent one, in 1836, to Sir Robert Peel, the opposer of the reform bill, on the occasion of his being chosen lord rector of the university, caused much animadversion on its apparent inconsistency: but, amongst a population so great as that of Glasgow, there will be, of course, diversity of opinion; this diversity heats by collision, till it becomes party spirit; and it is natural enough for each party to select an individual 'whom it delighteth to honour.'

BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF GLASGOW AND ITS INSTITUTIONS.

Glasgow is divided by the river Clyde into two unequal parts, that portion occupying the northern bank being the chief: this comprehends the old and new towns, with the suburbs of Calton, Bridgeton, Anderson, Brownfield, and Finnieston; the division on the opposite side of the river consists of the barony of Gorbals, including Hutchesontown, Laurieston, Tralestone, and Kingston. The communication between these two divisions of the city is by four bridges, three of stone and one of timber: the former are very ornamental; that at the end of Jamaica-street, called Glasgow-bridge, is of recent construction, and is conspicuously elegant; it consists of seven arches, and the curvature is so trifling that the transit by it is attended with no inconvenience. The noble quay, which extends from this bridge in a westerly direction to a great distance, is named the Broomielaw; and it is here that the vessels, by which this part of the river is crowded, discharge and take in their cargoes: a commodious shed ranges along the greater part of the line of the quay; and (owing to the admirable regulations established, and the commanding width of the line), notwithstanding the prodigious amount of business transacted, the operations of the port are accomplished without confusion or noise, and with surprising celerity. The lower part of the Broomielaw is appropriated chiefly to the multitudes of steam-vessels that navigate the Clyde. The southern bank of the river is now undergoing great improvements; a shed is erecting, and ere long both banks will be animated by the characteristic bustle of a great commercial port. The river between the opposite quays has not only been very materially widened, but it is progressively being deepened through the instrumentality of dredging machines, so that ships of four hundred tons burden can now unload at the Broomielaw. The city is greatly indebted to the late Mr. Spreull, who, during the period he held the office of city chamberlain, exerted himself for the accomplishment of this important object; the present spirited river trustees are vigorously acting upon his suggestions, Mr. David Bell being prominently active. The mud raised by the machines is conveyed down the Clyde in flats, and spread where the shore is low and swampy; by which process the banks of the river are raised, and a rich soil is deposited. A diving-bell is also employed, in order to raise any large stones that might obstruct the free navigation of the river.

The two main streets of the city cross each other at right angles—one running east and west, the other north and south. The former is nearly two miles in length and eighty feet wide, assuming at different points the names of Gallowgate, Trongate, and Argyle-street; noble houses and handsome shops, with few exceptions, range on both sides throughout the entire line. The street which runs from north to south is about a mile in length and fifty feet broad, bearing successively the names of Castle-street, Kirk-street, High-street, and the Saltmarket. The point of intersection of these two lines is called the Cross, and may be termed the nucleus of the city. Here stand the Town-hall and the Fontine Coffee-room (or old Exchange), with a fine piazza in front; opposite to which is a strikingly effective equestrian statue of King William III, presented to the city, in 1735, by James M'Crea, Esq., then governor of Madras, and a native of Glasgow. Parallel with Argyle-street, towards the north, are three other splendid streets, named Ingram-street, St. Vincent-street and George-street, crossed by others of uniform elegance. The architectural taste displayed in this modern section of the city is of the first order, to which the two fine squares, George's and Blythswood, add a graceful magnificence; the beautifully executed monumental statues of the justly celebrated Watt and the brave and lamented Moore adorn the former square. Blythswood-square occupies an elevated site, and the superior style of the mansions around it indicates that this neighbourhood has been adopted as a favourite place of residence by the opulent. The houses are all of stone, and the construction and arrangement of the streets impart to this vicinity a resemblance to a portion of Bath—the two superb crescents adjacent strengthening the similitude. The old town lies to the east of the Trongate, extending to the Clyde on the south and to the cathedral on the north. At the back of the cathedral is a rocky eminence called the Merchants' Park, upon the summit of which, on a fluted Doric column fifty-eight feet high, is placed a colossal statue of the illustrious Scottish reformer, John Knox; appropriate inscriptions are sculptured on the four sides of the pedestal; this proud monument, so attractive from its position and magnitude, was raised in the year 1825. Contiguous to this is another, similar in character but of inferior dimensions, erected more recently, to the memory of M'Gavin, the formidable opponent of popery, and author of 'The Protestant.' The statue of Knox is 250 feet above the level of the Clyde, and is a conspicuous object at a great distance; the artist was Mr. Forrest, of Lanark—the likeness taken from an original painting in the Glasgow university. The surrounding grounds have been tastefully planted, and formed into a cemetery; and the stranger will be highly gratified by a visit to this interesting spot. The view from the summit of the hill is pleasing and commanding; access to it is by a handsome bridge, beneath which is a waterfall. The monument to Lord Nelson is a simple obelisk, 143 feet in height, surrounded by a protecting railing; the four sides of the pedestal record the birth, achievements and death of the hero of 'the hundred fights;' and the fact of this being the first memorial sculptured to his memory impresses a high idea of the public spirit of the citizens. The 'Green,' of which it is so conspicuous an ornament, is Glasgow's pride; neither encroachment nor injury, however partial, can be committed upon it with impunity; its motto is the same as that of the national thistle, 'Nemo me impune lacessit.' This delightful promenade, from its extent, its verdure, and its plantations, may be denominated a park, the Clyde laving its southern margin: the prospect towards the south-east is beautiful and extensive—woods and villas in the foreground, and the hill of Dvclmont, with the loftier and more distant one of Tinto, in the distance; here, during the summer months, may be witnessed the national game of golf; and often is the Green animated by military evolutions: the delightful sward is, however, appropriated to usefulness as well as pastime—Scotland's bonnie lassies frequently convert a portion of it into a bleaching-ground, for contiguous to this recreative rendezvous is the public washing-house, in which every convenience is provided for the deterative process; there are other similar establishments in different quarters of the city. The Clayslap Public Mills for the supply of flour are upon a scale of great magnitude; the machinery is propelled by two powerful steam-engines; there are granaries capacious enough to contain from thirty thousand to forty thousand bolls of grain, and the mills can manufacture three thousand bolls per week.

COMMERCE, TRADE AND MANUFACTURES.

It will be seen, from the briefly sketched annals at the commencement of this article, that fishing was the earliest branch of productive industry established in Glasgow; cured salmon was exported in large quantities to France, and different French productions were taken in exchange. In 1667 a whale-fishing company was formed, and a soap manufactory established. The commerce of Glasgow was at first carried on in vessels chartered from English ports; although it is on record that this city was in possession of shipping prior to the year 1546, and in the reign of Charles II the 'Leon' privateer was equipped here for a cruise against the Dutch; it was not until the year 1718, however, that a ship built on the Clyde, the property of Glasgow citizens, crossed the Atlantic; at that time a good supply of tobacco was brought to this market, and the merchants were enabled to dispose of that article upon more advantageous terms than those of London and other commercial towns in England, which produced great animosity between those parties: the English tobacco merchants charged those at Glasgow with frauds on the revenue; an inquiry was eventually brought before parliament, when a number of restrictions were imposed on the trade, which caused it to decline in Glasgow till the year 1735; it then began to revive, and at length attained such a degree of prosperity that, for several years previous to the American revolutionary war, the annual imports of tobacco into the Clyde were from 35,000 to 45,000 hogsheds; in the year immediately preceding that disastrous war, 57,143 hogsheds were imported; from 1,200 to 1,300 hogsheds, only, of the annual import, were sold for home consumption: indeed this trade, at that period, engrossed nearly the whole capital and commercial enterprise of Glasgow. The manufacture of green glass bottles was introduced in 1730; but the demand was then so very limited, that, although the establishment was of but inferior magnitude, the workmen were employed in the glass-house only about four months in the year. The flint glass or crystal manufactory was established in the year 1777; it has been brought to a state of great perfection, and is successfully carried on in the vicinity of the city. Inkle wares were first manufactured here in the year 1732, and were not then made in any other town in Britain; a Mr. Alexander Harvey, of this city, brought away from Haarlem, at the peril of his life, two inkle looms and a workman, and in consequence the article was first manufactured in Glasgow. About the same date a manufactory of Delf-ware was established here. The first printfield that appeared in this vicinity was at Pollockshaws, about the year 1742. The merchants and manufacturers of Glasgow, compelled to turn their attention to other objects when their favourite intercourse with America was interrupted by the war in 1775, began more generally to speculate upon the establishment of manufactures; the introduction of the muslin trade was the result, and it was prosecuted by men of capital with the greatest spirit and success. The progress of the cotton manufactory in this city was thenceforth very rapid; a number of spinning-works, constructed on scientific principles, were put into operation; most of the various fabrics produced from cotton were executed with astonishing celerity and perfection; and the dyeing and printing of linsens and cottons kept pace with these affinitive improvements. A variety of other manufactures, viz. linsens, bandanas, woollens, iron and machinery, chymical works, turkey-red dyeing, &c., consecutively followed, and were pursued with activity and advantage. To the list may now be added brass-working and type-founding, smallwares, damask manufacturing, tanning, sugar refining, &c., all of which are carried on extensively either in the city or neighbourhood. The silk-throwing mills of Mr. Merris Pollok, at Govan, are upon as extensive a scale as any in Scotland. The merchants import, to a large amount, sugars, rum, wines, brandy, timber, coffee, cotton, &c., and numberless other productions of the western world, particularly from Demerara, Caracas, Buenos Ayres, the United States, Canada, Nova Scotia, &c.; their commercial transactions likewise extend to the coasts of Asia and Africa, and are of considerable consequence in many of the ports of Europe. Their exportations comprise muslins, shawls and every description of cotton goods, silks, glass, soap, whisky, and various manufactures of the neighbouring town of Paisley as well as the products of the adjacent districts. The situation of Glasgow, surrounded by a rich coal-field, and supplied with that important mineral at an uncommonly cheap rate, with the facilities of conveyance by water in nearly every direction, renders it an advantageous site for carrying on almost all kinds of manufacture.

The river Clyde, and the canal connecting this river with the Frith of Forth, being the channels through which the commerce of Glasgow is mainly conducted, it may be gratifying concisely to narrate a few circumstances illustrative of their navigation—closing with an exhibition (from official documents obligingly entrusted to the compilers) of the progressive increase of the business of the port. In the year 1758 the first act passed for the improvement of the river, which created what is now called 'the river trust'; the preamble of this act recites 'that the river Clyde, from Dumbuck to the bridge of Glasgow, is so very shallow in several parts, that boats, &c., cannot pass except at high water at spring tides;' and the act then empowers the 'trust' to scour, straighten, deepen and improve the river; authorizing them also to exact certain rates and duties for the same. The second act for improving the Clyde passed in 1770, the third in 1809, and the fourth and last in 1825—all of which authorized the improvement of the river by 'widening, straightening and deepening,' and the levying of stipulated duties and rates, until the river be made 'thirteen feet deep at neap tides in every part thereof;' and likewise to form new works for directing the stream, and to remove all obstructions; and when these purposes are fully accomplished, the rates are to be lowered in such proportions as may be conducive to the general interests of trade: the acts also empowered the trustees to borrow sums of money upon the security of the rates. The important objects of these acts are already in a great measure effected by the skill and activity of the river trust, whose operations are conducted in the manner herebefore described; but it is unfortunate that, from the low duty levied on coals exported, and the exemption of the burghesses of Dumbarton from river and harbour dues, the revenue of the river trust is materially deteriorated. The exemption of Dumbarton arose from a contract between the corporations of Glasgow and Dumbarton, in the year 1700, by which, in consideration of the latter having had, up to that period, a superiority over the Clyde, all vessels belonging to that port under fourteen tons burthen were exonerated from dues; considerable adroitness and influence must have been exerted, however, to induce the legislature, in 1825, to exempt the vessels above that size, which paid like all others until that enactment. Coals pay only 2d. per ton, and the ships that convey them but 1d. on their tonnage, for quay and harbour rates—which proportion, if general, would be inadequate to preserve the quays and river, and to defray the necessary expenses of management. Besides the grand improvements already in operation, it is proposed to construct a wet dock near the Windmill-croft, to improve the navigation above Hutcheson-bridge, and to connect the upper navigation with the lower by means of a lock. In proof of the success that has attended the efforts of the river trust, vessels of 400 tons burden can now come up to the Broomielaw, whereas, a very few years ago, none of greater burden than 150 tons could reach it. The 'Don Juan,' now in the harbour, will register, as a steamer, from 450 to 480 tons; her length is 206 feet, and her breadth 52, with two engines of the nominal combined power of 320 horses. The 'Jupiter' and the 'Vulcan,' trading between Glasgow and Ireland—the 'City of Glasgow,' the 'Unicorn' and the 'Eagle,' to Liverpool, are all noble vessels. The smaller steamers are almost countless, and the subjoined comparative statements will shew the extent and importance which steam navigation has attained on the Clyde; the arrivals are at the Broomielaw only:—

The exports and imports, during the past year, by the Glasgow and Edinburgh Canal, and the number of vessels which navigated the canal, were as follows:—Exports, 72,221 tons—Imports, 104,611 tons; number of vessels, 2,789. The trade upon the Monkland and the Paisley canals is also very considerable. The Garnkirk and Glasgow Railway is a very convenient medium of transit, both for passengers and goods; it passes through Gartsherrie, Coat bridge and Airdrie. The multiplication of steam-vessels has caused a corresponding increase in ship-building, and the manufacture of machinery and steam-boilers, which are very extensively conducted at Glasgow and its neighbourhood.

This brief statement of the nature and extent of the commerce of Glasgow cannot be more appropriately closed than by a description of that superb temple which has been erected for the convenience of its votaries—the ROYAL EXCHANGE, which magnificent edifice stands on the western side of Queen-street. The principal entrance is by a grand portico of twelve fluted Corinthian columns, thirty feet high. After passing through a tasteful vestibule, the visiter enters the great reading-room, which is 120 feet long and 62 feet wide; the lofty roof is supported by a double row of columns 19 feet high, each composed of a single stone. A dome, supported by twelve elegant Corinthian pillars, surmounts the building, which, taken as a whole, both for magnitude and beauty, has not its parallel in Great Britain, nor scarcely in Europe; the Bourse of Paris is its only competitor. The great room is supplied with all the leading newspapers, and strangers are courteously allowed the privileges of the room upon subscribing their names. The numerous apartments below and above are appropriated to various commercial purposes. The Royal Exchange forms the centre of a splendid group of buildings, of which the branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is the chief; it is in the Ionic order; the portico is greatly admired for its classic proportions: Mr. Archibald Elliott, of London, was the architect, and Messrs. John and James Smith the builders. The Tontine Exchange-room, in the Trough, has been noticed in another place; this also is a room of superior elegance, and liberally supplied with the public journals.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT, &c.

The 'Lord Provost' is the designation of the chief magistrate of Glasgow, who is styled honourable: the subordinate functionaries are five bailies, the dean of guild, and the deacon convener. There are thirty-two councillors—six for each of the five districts into which the city is divided, and the dean of guild and deacon convener, who are councillors by virtue of their offices. The principal officers connected with the corporation are the treasurer, chamberlain, town clerks, master of works, bailie of the river and frith of Clyde and his deputy, bailie of provan, procurator fiscal, and superintendent of streets and buildings. There are also two other bodies that exercise municipal privileges—the Merchants' House and the Trades' House: the dean of guild belongs to and is nominated by the former, and the convener to the latter house, by which he is appointed. The different suburban burghs and the barony of Gorbals have each their respective local functionaries. The Trades' Hall, in Glassford-street, is a very imposing building: the front consists of a centre and wings, supported by a rustic basement; four Doric columns above support the entablature, and a dome, surmounted by a lantern, rises from the roof. The hall, one of the finest rooms in the city, is seventy feet long, thirty-five broad, and twenty-four high, exclusive of the dome. On the walls and staircase are hung portraits of persons of the trades' rank that have conferred donations on the house, and also tablets recording the names of the conveners from 1605 to the present time. The police is under the direction of the honourable the lord provost, the magistrates, dean of guild, deacon convener, and thirty-five commissioners, one to each of the thirty-five wards into which Glasgow is sub-divided. There are several courts held within the jurisdiction of the city, the chief of which are the following:—the Dean of Guild Court, held every alternate Thursday at eleven o'clock, takes cognizance of buildings and streets. The Burgh Small Debt Court, held every Monday at eleven for the recovery of debts not exceeding £2., and on Tuesdays and Thursdays at one for sums under 10s. The Sheriff Small Debt Court, for debts not exceeding £8. 6s. 8d., sits every Thursday at eleven, and has jurisdiction over the whole county of Lanark. The Justice of Peace Small Debt Court, for the Lower Ward of Lanarkshire, meets every Monday morning at ten, in the Court Hall, to decide claims of £5. and under. The Water Bailie Court sits every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and has maritime jurisdiction between Glasgow Bridge and the Clough, near the mouth of the Clyde. The Sheriff Ordinary Court sits every Wednesday at eleven, and the Burgh Ordinary Court every Friday, except during vacation; both adjudicate on causes of any amount, however large.

GAOL AND PUBLIC OFFICES.—This range of building has its principal frontage towards the Green, and is divided into five compartments, with a portico in the centre, composed of a double row of fluted columns. The justiciary hall is in the centre, behind the portico, arranged with all the conveniences requisite in a court of justice; and to the north of which is the borough court. The council chambers are on the south side, and the remainder of the floor is devoted to the accommodation of jurymen, clerks, and witnesses. The upper story contains the lord provost's room, and other public apartments. The west wing is appropriated to the confinement of debtors; and the western or back part of the building is the prison for felons. In the underground story are cells for prisoners condemned to die, which are of cast-iron, surrounded by a stone wall. The building contains also apartments for the keeper and turnkeys. Taken as a whole, the structure combines considerable beauty with solidity and strength. The City and County Bridewell is situate in Duke-street, and consists of a central rotunda and four radiating wings, containing the governor's house and offices, a chapel, and two hundred and sixty-eight cells. The Police-office is in South Albion-street.

RELIGIOUS EDIFICES.

The Cathedral, or High Church, ornaments the north-eastern termination of the city, and is one of the very few ecclesiastical structures of ancient Scotland that has withstood the withering influence of time, the assaults of religious fury, and the sapping of neglect: it arose in the early part of the 12th century. John Achaus, bishop of Glasgow, was its founder, and John Murdo its supposed architect, the reigning king being David I, who witnessed its consecration. A stone above the door of the choir tells us, in Latin, that it was dedicated in 1197, St. Munzo or Kentigern being invoked as its tutelary patron. The figure of the edifice is cruciform. From the centre of the building rises a square embattled tower, from which springs a lofty octangular spire. At the western end of the church is another square tower, covered with a leaden pyramidal roof, within which is a clock and bell. The entire building is arranged in four divisions, namely, the choir, the inner high church, the outer church, and the vaulted cemetery. The outer church has recently been dismantled, previous to a proposed renovation of the fabric. One hundred and forty-seven pillars and one hundred and fifty-seven windows combine to give support and illumination to the church. The cemetery beneath the nave will excite in the visiter an appalling interest: the roof is supported by sixty-five pillars. In consequence of the elevated site of the cathedral the views from its battlements are very extensive and diversified.—The Barony Church, in front of the cathedral, was built in 1798, from a design of Mr. Adam: the parish connected with this church is the largest in the city.—The College, or Blackfriars Church, in High-street, is a plain building, erected in 1699, on the site of a more ancient pile, called Blackfriars, which, in 1666, was destroyed by a thunder storm.—The Tron or Laigh Church, near the Cross, was erected in 1794, and is a plain building, surmounted by a cupola. A spire, built in 1637, stands between it and the street, having a clock and two bells. The name of Tron was applied to this church from a part of its steeple having been used as a weigh-house. The clock faces of this church are lighted with gas.—St. Andrew's Church, which stands in the square of the same name, was completed in 1756, at an expense of £15,000, and resembles that of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, London. The architect was Mungo Nasmyth. The steeple, which contains a clock, has little to recommend it; but the interior of the church is finished with great elegance.—St. Enoch's was erected in 1780, from designs by Mr. Jaffray: the front, on which is the spire, is decorated with a Doric portico, and has a light and handsome appearance: it stands in St. Enoch's-square, and is a graceful object from Arayle-street.—St. George's, on the west side of Buchanan-street, fronting George-street, is a handsome edifice, with three quarter Doric columns in front, the whole height of the church. The steeple is crowned with a dome and obelisk, and is one hundred and sixty-two feet high. This church was finished at an expense of £9,000. From its position in the centre of George-street, the line of connexion with that street and West George-street is interrupted, but for which circumstance the former would have been the finest street in Glasgow; still the church, as a terminating object, has a fine effect.—St. John's, in M'Farlane-street, is one of the largest places of worship in the city, affording sixteen hundred sittings: it was built during the residence here of Dr. Chalmers, whose pulpit oratory attracted large congregations. The exterior is of chaste Gothic. This church has a magnificent steeple, one hundred and thirty-eight feet high, containing a complete peal of bells.—The Gorbals Church is situate at the east end of Carlton-place, fronting the river: it was completed in 1810, from designs by Mr. D. Hamilton.—St. David's Church, at the end of the Candleriggs, is in the Gothic style, and was built from the designs of Messrs. Rickman and Hutchinson, of Birmingham. Circumstances having rendered it expedient to retain the shape and dimensions of the old church, it is built in the form of a cross, and is ornamented with a tower, one hundred and twenty feet high, containing a complete set of bells. The vaulted cemetery beneath is one of the most complete in the kingdom. The cost of the church was £7,000., but the sepulchres in the crypt sold for £4,000. The beauty and symmetry of this building cause it to rank amongst the most conspicuous ornaments of Glasgow.—The patronage of the city churches belongs to the magistrates and town-council, with the exception of those of the Inner High Church and the Barony, which pertain to the Crown. The patronage of Gorbals Church is with the heritors or feuars, who purchased it from the College. The stipends of the city clergy are £425. per annum, and those of the Inner High Church and the Barony £500. The pew sittings are let annually.

Secession, Episcopalian, and Dissenting Chapels.—These are very numerous, and many of them are attended by large congregations: those most conspicuous for architectural beauty are the following:—North Albion-street United Secession Church, which is ornamented by a fine Grecian portico. Wellington-street Chapel, in the same connexion, is a very tasteful structure, below which are numerous sepulchral crypts. The Greyfriars Chapel possesses one of the finest porticos in the city. St. Mary's Episcopal Chapel, in Renfield-street, of modern erection, and that near St. Andrew's-square, built in 1750, are both ornamental to their respective neighbourhoods. George-street Independent Chapel, in which Dr. Wardlaw officiates, is a chaste specimen of the Grecian style, and is a conspicuous object from St. George's-square; it was designed by Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh, and cost £10,000. The new Baptist Chapel, at the south end of Hope-street, is very creditable to the taste of its designer. The Roman Catholic Chapel, in Clyde-street, erected in 1815, is one of the most graceful edifices in Glasgow: the style is pointed Gothic, light in its aspect, and rich in its embellishments. The chapel will contain considerably more than two thousand persons, and is arranged within in a style corresponding with its elegant exterior. Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh, furnished the design, and Mr. Smith, of Glasgow, was the builder.—A list of all the other places of worship will be found at the end of the Glasgow Directory, with the names of their ministers.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The Royal Infirmary, situate near the cathedral, exhibits an exterior of considerable beauty, while the arrangements of the interior are skilfully adapted to their benevolent object. The building has been much enlarged since its first erection, the latest addition being for the reception of fever patients. The lowest story contains a laboratory, an apothecary's shop, hot and cold baths, and strong chambers for the temporary restraint of the insane. Beneath the dome is a spacious circular apartment, which is appropriated to surgical operations.—The Lunatic Asylum, near Port Dundas, is a building strikingly original in its design. The centre is octagonal, with four wings diverging from it, and is occupied by the superintendent and assistants, and, during the day, by all the tractable patients. The wings contain rows of commodious chambers, and a long gallery for exercise. The patients are classed according to their sex, rank, and the nature of their malady. The charge for the maintenance of paupers from Glasgow, or from those parishes which have contributed £50. for every 1,500 of their population, is 7s. per week; for all other paupers, 8s. 6d. The charge for the middle and higher classes varies from 15s. to £3. 3s. per week. This elegant asylum is unique in its plan, and perhaps more fitted for its purpose than any similar institution.—The Deaf & Dumb Asylum is contiguous to the Infirmary, and, though plain in its aspect, is well adapted to its interesting object.—The Asylum for the Blind, by a recent enlargement, has been rendered capable of accommodating more than one hundred inmates, who are advantageously employed in the fabrication of various useful articles; and the recent invention of printing in relief, by enabling the blind to read manipular or tangible letters, has given a most interesting facility to their education. The contributors, at the annual meeting in January, 1837, had the high gratification of witnessing the promptitude with which the pupils read with their fingers. Mr. Alston, the indefatigable treasurer, has effected a great improvement in the broad Roman capitals of the late Dr. Fry, by sharpening the faces and reducing their size. The sympathies of the spectators were most powerfully excited by the introduction of a young woman, labouring under the extraordinary deprivation of sight, speech and hearing, who, from the instruction received in this asylum, could read in the new mode with facility, and communicate with her blind companions with promptitude. The income in 1836, from the sales and contributions, amounted to £2,652.—The Magdalen Asylum, adjoining the one for lunatics, was erected in 1812, from designs by Dr. Cleland, a gentleman to whom Glasgow owes many obligations. The accommodations are in every way suitable to the purposes for which it was built; and its benefactors have the satisfaction of believing that many of its female inmates have subsequently become permanently worthy of the protection that has been afforded them.—The Luck Hospital is contiguous to the Magdalen Asylum.—Hutchinson's Hospital, in Ingram-street, was founded by the two brothers, George and Thomas Hutchinson, between the years 1639 and 1641: the former amassed a large fortune as a writer and notary, although his charges were so moderate that, it is stated, he would never charge more than sixteen pennies Scots for the writing of a bond, however large the amount: the latter brother was a preacher. From the original endowment and subsequent benefactions, the trustees are enabled to appropriate £3,000. per annum to pensions for aged men and women, and for the education and partial clothing of poor boys, together with £3. per annum to the latter. The present building, erected in 1803, is ornamented with an octagonal spire, one hundred and fifty-six feet high. The great hall contains Stirling's public library.—St. Nicholas's Hospital was founded by Bishop Muirhead, in the reign of James III, for the support of twelve aged men and a priest; and Archbishop Leighton, in 1677, added £150. for the benefit of two more: the funds of the institution, however, have suffered considerable diminution.—The Town's Hospital, in Clyde-street, consists of a centre and wings, and is designed for the reception of paupers, a part of the building being appropriated to the sick and mentally imbecile, whilst the healthy inmates are employed in useful occupations. The great increase of Glasgow, both in population and size, renders it very desirable that this house of benevolence should be enlarged, and its situation made more airy; and its removal is now in contemplation.—The Female Orphan Institution is for the reception of poor orphans and destitute girls, who are educated, clothed, and maintained for £10. 10s. per annum, or, without clothing, for £8. which must be paid in advance.—The Eye Infirmary, in College-street, is liberally supported, and has been successful in its operation.—In addition to the benevolent institutions already enumerated, there exist many others which shed a lustre on the memories of departed citizens of Glasgow. Mitchell's mortification, made in 1729, yields £100. per annum to decayed buresses and their families; and Tennant's, made in 1741, renders to three widows 80 merks, or £4. 18s. 10d., the remainder devolving on two of the General Session Charity Schools. Wilson's charity, founded in 1778, bestows education and clothing on forty-eight poor boys; and Millar's, since 1790, has educated sixty girls annually, at a yearly expense of £300. The societies for religious objects are also very numerous, and are liberally supported.

INSTITUTIONS FOR EDUCATION, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND THE ARTS.

The UNIVERSITY.—This venerable College presents its antiquated front on the eastern side of High-street. Entering by the central gate, over which are the royal arms, the visiter finds himself in the first quadrangle, and he will not fail to notice the antique stone stairs leading to the Faculty hall, with their guardian lion sejant on one side, and unicorn on the other: this hall contains many rare paintings, both historical and portrait, among the latter are those of Luther, Knox, Buchanan, Napier and Smollet. The second quadrangle is much larger, surrounded on three sides by buildings, part of which are in the old monastic style, with low towers and curtains; while others, of recent erection, are built in the modern style, the effect of which is distressing to good taste. These buildings contain the anatomical theatre, and rooms for the classes in Greek, logic, humanity, chymistry, medicine and mathematics. The old library is an insulated building to the south-east; and the new one is at the south end of the anatomical theatre. The chapel, or common hall, is fitted up with considerable taste, and can accommodate nearly 1,000 worshippers. Rising over the entrance to the second quadrangle is the steeple, 135 feet high, which is protected from lightning by a conductor, erected, in 1772, under the direction of the renowned Dr. Franklin. At the back of the College are spacious gardens, in which is placed the Macfarlane Observatory; and near the entrance to these gardens, forming the eastern termination to the College, stands the Hunterian Museum, an edifice, pronounced by critics to be one of the felicitous specimens of classical architecture in Great Britain: it was reared in 1804, from designs by Mr. Stark; the principal front forming a Roman Doric portico of six columns, behind which is a recess, separated by a second row of pillars. Beautiful as this portico is, the whole fabric is in harmony with it, combining graceful proportion of parts with simple elegance of form. This museum was bequeathed to the College by the celebrated Dr. Hunter, of London, who was a native of East Kilbride. The collection comprises specimens of natural history, anatomical preparations, paintings, books, and medals—the medals being estimated at £30,000, and the whole collection cost Dr. Hunter £100,000: the pictures are all from great masters; amongst many others are Titian, Guido, Domenichino, Rubens, and Rembrandt. The university was founded by Turnbull, Roman catholic bishop of Glasgow, in 1450-1. At the reformation Archbishop James Beaton fled before the triumphant presbyterians, carrying with him the charters and records, which he placed in the Scots College, at Paris. James VI granted a new charter, and endowed the college with valuable property, since which it has risen to high reputation. The establishment consists of a lord chancellor, lord rector, dean of faculty and principal, with professors of divinity, church history, oriental languages, natural philosophy, logic, Greek, humanity, civil law, medicine, anatomy, practical astronomy, Regius professors of natural history, surgery, chymistry and botany, and a lecturer on materia medica.—The Andersonian University, in George-street, founded by the late John Anderson, professor of natural philosophy in the University of Glasgow, on the 7th of May, 1795, and the following year was incorporated by the magistrates and council. This University is placed under the superintendence of eighty-one trustees, and the lord provost is one of the inspecting visitors. The endowment consisted of a philosophical apparatus, a library, and museum; but the prosperity of the institution has been so great, that the trustees have purchased the extensive pile of buildings formerly occupied by the grammar school, which were opened in 1823, and the numerous classes now receive a more extended education, including philosophy, science and the arts. The museum is opened to the public from eleven to three, on the payment of one shilling.—The Grammar School, situate at the top of the hill behind the above University, is of an origin supposed to be coeval with the Cathedral, and within this Alma Mater several hundreds of youth acquire the elements of a liberal education.—The Mechanics' Institution, near North Hanover-street, owes its origin to a dispute among the managers of the Andersonian University, and it would be well if all quarrels terminated so beneficially. The useful class of persons that give name to this institution acquire, from competent lecturers, that species of knowledge, which, in the first instance, elevates themselves, and will, ultimately, the nation to which they belong. The Calton, Mile-end and Bridgeton Mechanics' Institution was instituted in 1833, for an object similar to that of the above, namely, improvement in the arts and sciences.—Faculty of Physicians' and Surgeons' Hall. This ornamental building is situated in St. Enoch's-square, within which the two incorporated bodies above-named hold their meetings. The charter of their incorporation confers the right of granting diplomas, after examination, to students in medicine and surgery; and every person practicing without such diploma in Glasgow, Renfrew, Dumbarton, Lanark, Kyle, Carrick, Ayr and Cunningham, is liable to a fine of £3. 6s. 8d. for each offence. The members of faculty enjoy the privilege of exemption from many imposts and irksome duties. The freedom fine of admission into the faculty is £150. and licentiates within the city or suburbs pay £20. but those in the country £5. 5s.: for the diploma of each student £5. 5s. are required. Every candidate for a diploma must produce evidence that he has studied three winter sessions, either at an university or under resident members of the colleges of physicians and surgeons of Edinburgh, London, or Dublin, or under the members of the faculty of physicians and surgeons in Glasgow; and that during that period he has attended public lectures on anatomy, surgery, chymistry, materia medica, the theory and practice of medicine, and midwifery; and that he has attended one year at some hospital, and studied pharmacy in an apothecary's or surgeon's shop for six months, without which he cannot be taken on trial. Candidates who have served an apprenticeship of three or more years must produce similar evidence. The faculty contribute to a fund, founded in 1792, for the support of their widows and children.

Glasgow returns two members to parliament—the present representatives are Lord William Bentinck and James Oswald, Esq.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT.

The Theatre Royal is in Dunlop-street, and is capacious and tasteful, though not so elegant as its predecessor in Queen-street, which was burnt down in 1829. This house has recently been repaired and renovated, and is conducted with great spirit.—The Assembly and Concert Rooms were erected in 1796, and constitute a very elegant embellishment to Ingram-street: the wings were added in 1807.—The Royal Botanic Garden, at the end of Sauchyhall-road, is highly deserving of inspection, as within this inclosure flourish more than 12,000 species or varieties of trees and shrubs, inclusive of coffee, cotton, tea, sugar, chocolate, cocoa, date, cinnamon, nutmeg, clove and bread fruit. Strangers are admitted on payment of one shilling.—Rosehall Zoological Gardens and Museum, near Woodside-road, contain an extensive collection of animals, insects, plants, and flowers. The Zoological portion of the exhibition is chiefly stuffed, but there are a few living animals: the collection will highly gratify the visiter, and the charge is merely nominal.—The Argyle Arcade runs from Argyle-street to Buchanan-street, and contains attractive shops, covered in by a lofty roof of glass.

The general slaughter-house for cattle is situate near the gaol, it is supplied abundantly with water, and kept commendably clean. The chief market day is held on Wednesday: a copious supply of provisions from Ireland causes prices to be kept moderate. There are five fairs in the year, viz. the second Wednesday in January, Thursday before Easter, last Monday in May, the whole of the second week in July, and the first Wednesday after Martinmas.

HAMILTON,

BOTHWELL, DALZIEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HAMILTON is an ancient town, royal burgh, and the capital of the parish of its name and of the middle ward of the county; 37 miles w. by s. of Edinburgh, 10½ s. s. e. of Glasgow, 15 n. w. of Lanark, 8 s. of Airdrie, and 7 n. of Strathaven: it occupies an eligible site, on the roads betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle and Edinburgh and Ayr, and a pleasant situation in a highly cultivated country, washed by the Clyde and the Avon. The town lies along the base of a rising ground, extending nearly a mile in length, and consists of several streets of substantial well-built houses—not very regularly disposed, but handsome in appearance; and the whole town has an air of comfort, respectability, and activity. Of late years many improvements have been effected in the town and neighbourhood, and it is rapidly increasing in population and importance. A new line of street has been opened through the town, forming part of the London road; and a bridge, called Cadzow-bridge, has been thrown across the ravine, thereby avoiding the lower part of the old town: a new road is also in progress of formation, which will connect the south road to Glasgow with that leading to Carlisle; and a railway is contemplated to be laid down from Glasgow, to extend along the south bank of the Clyde, which, when completed, will prove the means of opening up the vast mineral field in the vicinity of Hamilton. Among the new buildings recently erected will be recognised the handsome town-hall, in form of a Roman temple, with appropriate offices and a gaol; and a new church of the establishment, dedicated to St. John. The town is lighted with gas by a company, and works are about to be constructed for supplying the inhabitants with water. The moderate distance of Hamilton from Glasgow has facilitated the introduction of weaving cotton goods here to a large amount; the lace trade is carried on to a considerable extent, and the prosperity of this branch has been greatly augmented by an improvement recently adopted in the manufacture of the article; among the other principal trading pursuits may be enumerated the manufacture of tobacco, and tanning and brewing. There are three banking establishments prosperously settled in this burgh, namely—a branch of the British Linen Company, one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the other of the Western Bank of Scotland.

In the infancy of the town, in the fifteenth century, its patron, Lord Hamilton, erected it into a burgh of barony; Queen Mary created it a royal burgh in 1548, but, after the reformation, the rights and privileges thus acquired from the crown were resigned into the hands of William Duke of Hamilton, who in 1670 restored to the community its former franchises, and erected it into a burgh of regality dependent on him and his successors. The government of the burgh is vested in two bailies and ten councillors; and in connexion with Lanark, Airdrie, Falkirk and Linnithgow, it sends a representative to parliament. The justices of peace hold regular courts for trial of minor offences.

The places of worship are two churches of the establishment, two meeting-houses of the united secession, the like number of relief churches, and an independent chapel. The old parish church was made collegiate in 1451, by Sir James Hamilton, for a provost and prebendary; it has always been the place of sepulture of that family. The great objects of attraction, in this part of Lanarkshire, are the Palace (as it is called) of the Duke of Hamilton, and its surrounding pleasure-grounds: the building forms three sides of a quadrangle; the rooms are spacious, particularly the picture gallery, which contains the finest collection in Scotland. In the middle of the great park, one mile from the town, on a rock overhanging the Avon, stand the ruins of Cadzow Castle, the ancient manor house; the park is well stocked with deer, and bears a number of stately oaks. The residence of the Hamilton family contributes materially to the welfare of the town. Amongst the charitable institutions of Hamilton are two hospitals for the reception of a certain number of old men—the one endowed by the noble family above mentioned, the other by a Mr. James Robertson; there are likewise some friendly societies, and two masonic lodges. In the vicinity, to the west of the town, on the road to Bothwell, are spacious and handsome barracks; and on the banks of the Clyde is an extensive race-course, on which horse-races occasionally take place, and the meetings are noted as among the best attended in Scotland. The weekly market is held on Friday; and the fairs on the second Thursday of February, the first Friday after the 15th of May, the last Thursday of June, and the second Thursday of November (old style).

BOTHWELL is an ancient village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, between eight and nine miles from the former and between two and three from the latter town. The parish is of an oval form, about eight miles and a half long by four broad; the great roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and from Glasgow to Carlisle, pass through it; and, besides the river Clyde, it is intersected by the two Calder, which are beautifully skirted with wood. Near the village, towards the west, on the side of the Clyde, is the modern mansion of Lord Douglas, standing in the midst of shrubberies and plantations; contiguous to which, on an eminence, is the magnificent ruin of Bothwell Castle, once a most important Scottish fortress, much admired by all visitors. The road to Hamilton is carried over the Clyde by means of Bothwell bridge, a name famous in Scottish history from this being the spot on which the Duke of Monmouth routed a formidable army of covenanters on the 22d of June, 1679. The ancient church of Bothwell was founded by Archibald 'the Grim,' Earl of Douglas, in 1398, with liberal endowments for a provost and eight prebendaries. Lately an elegant new church has been erected by the heritors of the parish; it is in the Gothic style, and exhibits a fine appearance as seen on approaching the village from Hamilton.

The parish of DALZIEL lies on the north bank of the Clyde; and the roads from Lanark to Glasgow, and from Edinburgh to Hamilton, pass through it. Near the centre of the parish, at about two miles from Hamilton, stands the church, in a conspicuous situation on the summit of a ridge; and on the picturesque banks of a small brook is seen the mansion-house of Dalziel, attached to the old tower of the manor—a high Gothic edifice, with battlements and loop-holes; it is a structure of considerable antiquity, and has been kept in repair to the present day solely on that account.

KILBRIDE (EAST) AND CARMUNNOCK.

KILBRIDE is a market village and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Muirkirk, 8 miles s. of the former city, the like distance n. of Strathaven, between 6 and 7 s.w. of Hamilton, and 45 w. by s. of Edinburgh. The parish, which comprehends the abrogated one of Torrance, contains some extensive lime-works, and coal also lies beneath the surface. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. The places of worship are the parish kirk and a relief chapel. Kilbride has produced several eminent men, among whom are found Dr. Wm. Hunter, and his brother, Mr. John Hunter, the celebrated anatomist and physiologist. A market is entitled to be held here on Tuesday, and four annual fairs; only two of the latter are now observed—these take place in June and November. There were also large sheep-markets held here in May and June; they have been discontinued, with the exception of one on the last Friday in May (old style), which is still well attended; on that day, likewise, the farmers' society exhibit prize cattle.

The parish of CARMUNNOCK lies on the north-western confines of the county, on the east bank of the White Cart river, having Kilbride on the south and

WITH NEW LANARK, KIRKFIELD-BANK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANARK is a royal burgh, market town, the capital of the county and parish to which it gives name, and the seat of a presbytery; 32 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 25 s. e. of Glasgow, 15 s. e. of Hamilton, and 11 n. w. of Biggar; situate on the main road from Stirling to Carlisle, and one mile above the left or east bank of the Clyde. It is a place of great antiquity, and is the spot where the first assembly of parliament mentioned in the history of Scotland was convened, by Kenneth III, in the year 978. It is said to have received its original charter from Alexander I, and it is certain that it was a royal town as early at least as Malcolm IV. Many of the ancient Scottish kings made Lanark (or Lanerk) their residence; and at one period there stood a castle, on an apparently artificial mount, at the bottom of the present Castlegate, the summit of which elevation is now converted into a bowling-green. Lanark possesses interest as having been the scene of the first decisive military enterprise of the celebrated Sir William Wallace—that patriot having here commenced his glorious (though personally unfortunate) career, by the defeat and death of William De Heselrig, the English sheriff of Lanarkshire, in 1293. We are told that Wallace having married a lady of the name of Braidfoot, the heiress of Lamington, resided with her privately at Lanark; that while there, he, with a few friends, had a quarrel and conflict with some officers of the English garrison; the party of Wallace being overpowered by numbers, he made his escape to Cartlaine Craigs—on which the sheriff seized on his wife and put her to death: to revenge this barbarous atrocity, Wallace and his friends attacked the sheriff in the night, and massacred him with two hundred and forty Englishmen. Bruce finally recovered Lanark from the English in 1310. The present town is principally composed of one line of streets, descending from east to west, bearing the respective names of High-street, Bloom-gate, and West-port; besides these, there are smaller streets diverging, and several lanes and closes. The main line contains many good stone buildings, of respectable appearance, and well-furnished shops; the whole being suitably lighted with gas, supplied by a company whose works were erected in 1832, at Steel's-cross. The general occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers; a few shoes are made for exportation; nail-making is carried on to some extent; there are two breweries, the like number of banking establishments, and three principal inns; one of the latter, the 'Clydesdale Hotel,' ranks amongst the most extensive and well-conducted inns to be found in the provincial towns of Scotland, and, with its fine portico entrance, is an embellishment to the street in which it stands. The County Buildings, in Hope-street, are a great ornament to that part of the town; they are in the Grecian style of architecture, with a noble front of freestone, and comprise commodious court-rooms and appropriate offices; the gaol is situated at the rear of the courthouse: the whole of this handsome and useful pile was completed in 1836, at an expense of upwards of £5,000.

As a royal burgh, whose charters were finally confirmed by Charles I, in 1632, it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a town-clerk, a treasurer, and seventeen councillors; it unites with Hamilton, Linlithgow, Airdrie and Falkirk in returning one member to parliament—the present representative is W. D. Gillon, Esq., of Wallhouse. The sheriff's court is held in the county buildings every Tuesday during session; a justice of peace court on the first and third Monday of each month; one for the burgh every Friday, and a general county meeting takes place annually, in the same edifice, on the last day of April.

The places of worship consist of the parish church, which stands in the centre of the main street, an united secession chapel, and two relief churches. In a niche over the eastern door of the church is placed a colossal statue of Wallace, executed and presented to the town by Forrest, a self-taught genius. The remains of the old parish church, which are situate at the distance of a quarter of a mile eastward of the town, have been deserted these last sixty years; tradition asserts that this structure, at public worship, the heroic Wallace first saw his subsequently murdered wife. In the cemetery which surrounds the church was interred William Lithgow, a celebrated and eccentric traveller of the reign of James VI: after his peregrination through a great portion of Europe and Asia, he came home miserably mutilated and disfigured by the inquisition, and settled in his native parish till his death. The principal educational institutions are the grammar school, supported by the corporation; and Wilson's free school, endowed by a lady of that name, in the year 1818, for the education of 25 boys and the like number of girls.

Lanark has ever possessed considerable attractions to the visiter and tourist, from the beautiful scenery with which it is surrounded, together with the three great falls of the Clyde; of these, two are above and one below the town: the uppermost is Bonington Linn, a cascade of about thirty feet; the next below is Cora Linn, where the water takes three distinct leaps, each as high as that of Bonington; the third occurs at Stonebyres, two miles below the town of Lanark. The Cartlane Crags, about a mile to the north of the town (supposed to have been formed by an earthquake), through which the Mouse water has forced its way to the Clyde, exhibit most strikingly the stupendous operations of nature: a bridge of three arches was thrown, in the year 1825, across the narrow 'gulph profound;' the depth, from the parapet of the bridge to the bed of the river, is more than one hundred and twenty feet. The neighbourhood of Lanark is adorned by many elegant seats and mansions of the nobility and gentry; among these, Lee House, the seat of the Lockhart family, is conspicuous. Horse-races are held, on an extensive and excellent course, about a mile and a half east of the town. The market day is Tuesday; fairs, the last Wednesdays of April, May and July (old style), the Thursday after the second Monday of October, and the first Wednesday of November (old style), all for cattle and horses, and lambs in the season.

NEW LANARK is a very neat, regular, and well-built village, about one mile south from Lanark, on the same side of the Clyde as that town. It was founded by Mr.

Broomgate—Thomas Smith, rector and session clerk

Dale in 1785, that gentleman having erected the first of the present long range of mills, and constructed a subterraneous aqueduct, about one hundred yards in length, through the solid rock—by which means he brought the waters of the Clyde on to the sloping plain on which the mills and the village now stand; the height of fall is about twenty-eight feet, which turns machinery sufficient to employ about eleven hundred hands; another mill, subsequently built, gives employment to about three hundred more. The middle (or Corehouse) fall of Clyde is about half a mile above the village. The 'Institution,' as it is called, is the school for the whole village, where the proprietors compel the inhabitants to send all their children from the age of three to thirteen. The great (and by many considered mistaken) philanthropist, Owen, was long a principal proprietor of these extensive mills; he made great efforts and sacrifices for the good of his work-people, and it is to him that the inhabitants owe their present educational institution, which, in its effects and results as regards the morals of this community, have worked so admirably, that during the last thirty years, it is affirmed, the records of the criminal courts exhibit but one conviction from among the population of this place, although during the whole of that period the number of its inhabitants has at no time been less than 2,400. The factories of New Lanark, and its instructive establishment, are now objects of curiosity to all tourists; and indeed strangers would deprive themselves of much gratification if they left this part of the country without paying them a visit.

KIRKLAND-BANK (or Kirkfield-bank) is a village in the parish of Lesmahago, one mile west of Lanark. The Clyde is crossed at this place by a stone bridge of three circular arches, over which the road from Lanark to Glasgow proceeds. It is intended to erect a chapel here under the establishment, for which purpose a considerable sum has been subscribed. The inhabitants, who amount to nearly one thousand in number, are chiefly employed in hand-loom weaving, and there is a distillery in constant operation.

LEADHILLS, CRAWFORD AND CRAWFORD JOHN.

LEADHILLS is a village in the parish of Crawford, 46 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 44 s. of Glasgow, 15 E. of Douglas Mill, and 16 N. of Thornhill; situate in an alpine region, amidst a wilderness of dismal heathy mountains, on the road from Glasgow to Dumfries. It derives its name from being the residence of workmen employed in the lead mines, which are the most valuable of any in Scotland, and perhaps in Britain: the mines, which are farmed by a company from the Earl of Hopetoun, have produced in some years 18,000 bars, at nine stone avoirdupois the bar; in the year 1809, 25,200 bars were produced, which, at £32. per ton (the then price), amounts to £45,360; the ore dug from these mines affords a very liberal proportion of silver. Gold was found in the sand of the mountains at an early period: during the reign of James VI of Scotland, Sir Bevis Balmer, a German, by order of Queen Elizabeth, was sent to collect gold-dust in the waters of Elvan and Glengonar, with which they were said to abound; he had a house at Wanlockhead, where he deposited the fruits of his labour: the attempt was revived by the late Lord Hopetoun, but soon discontinued, as the product was inadequate to the expense. It was at Leadhills that Allan Ramsay, the poet, was born and spent his earliest years. Fairs are held on the second Friday of June and the last Friday of October.

The population of the village, in the year 1836, amounted to about 1,200.

CRAWFORD is a small village in the parish of its name, eight miles from Leadhills, situate on the main road between Glasgow and Carlisle; it contains a good inn and the parish church, which latter was enlarged and improved in 1836. The name is said to be derived from the British compound Craw-ford, signifying the 'passage' or the 'road of blood'; an appellation supposed to have been obtained from this locality having been the scene of some bloody contest between the people of the country and their Roman invaders.

CRAWFORD JOHN is a parish in the upper part of Clydesdale, contiguous to the foregoing parish, and on the east of Muirkirk and Douglas. The small river named Duncaton water takes its rise at the head of this district. On the top of Nethererton Hill are the vestiges of an extensive encampment, and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of two ancient castles. At Snarshead, in this neighbourhood, a lead mine was lately opened, and is now being wrought with apparent success. The village, which is insignificant, is situate about a mile and a half south-west of the mail road, and about eight miles north of Leadhills; with the exception of the parish church and school, it contains nothing worthy of notice.

LESMAHAGO AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

LESMAHAGO (or, as it is more popularly called, ABBEY GREEN.) is a village in the parish of the former name, 12 miles s. e. of Hamilton, 6 n. w. of Douglas Mill, and the like distance s. w. of Lanark; situate on the west bank of the Nethan, in the midst of a district abounding with coal, lime and freestone, the latter of a very superior quality: in obtaining and working these valuable minerals, considerable numbers of the inhabitants find employment; whilst many others are occupied in weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers. The name 'Abbey Green' originated from the village being built on the spot where the old abbey formerly stood, of which nothing now remains but the fragment of a wall at the south-east corner of the parish church: this latter edifice, which is collegiate, is a spacious structure; adjoining to it is a well-conducted parish school, forming two sides of a small square in the centre of the village.

The river Clyde forms the north-eastern boundary of the parish, and in this part of its course is precipitated down the celebrated falls of Bonniton, Corehouse and Stonebyres; the Douglas water glides along the south-eastern quarter of the district, until it joins the Clyde; the Logan and Poniel, tributary streams to the latter river, also intersect the parish, which in many places is well clothed with wood, and agreeably diversified by gently rising hills. In the picturesque scenery of the parish, the remains of Craignethan or Diaphane Castle are conspicuous: this noble ruin occupies the summit of a lofty rugged eminence, which overhangs the junction of the Nethan and the Clyde; it was anciently the seat of Sir James Hamilton, whose fierce and sanguinary character is strongly portrayed in the events that Scottish history records in the reign of James V. When the unfortunate Mary escaped from Loch Leven, she took shelter here for a few days previous to the disastrous battle of Laneside; the room in which she slept is still pointed out amidst the ruins: The steep and woody banks around this castle (which is confessedly the prototype of the 'Tilietudlem' of the author of 'Waverley,') present some scenery in which the beautiful and the sublime contend for the mastery. Upon the whole, the parish of Lesmahago, whether considered on account of its subterraneous treasures or its superficial fertility and beauty, is equally deserving of a visit from the man of science and the admirer of natural loveliness. In the 'Gazetteer of Scotland' will be found a more detailed description of this truly interesting parish. One or two fairs are held annually at Abbey Green, but they are merely devoted to holiday amusements. The population of the village, at the present time, amounts to about one thousand, being a considerable augmentation since the last census was taken.

RUTHERGLEN,

RUGLEN, as it is commonly called, is a small town and ancient royal burgh in the parish of its name, situate two miles and a half south-east from Glasgow and nine west from Hamilton. The town consists of one principal street, and a few lanes; it is undistinguished by any staple manufacture, but in its vicinity collieries are wrought, and chymical and dye works are in operation. Rutherglen was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1126, by King David I; by his charter, the inhabitants enjoyed many privileges. At that period, small craft came up the Clyde to Rutherglen quay; Glasgow, however, by its superior consequence, arising from its trade and manufactures, absorbed the privileges and engrossed the traffic of this burgh, and the Broomielaw has for years been the station of all external commerce. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and fifteen councillors; it contains a prison, and a monthly court is held; it unites with Dumbarton, Kilmarnock, Port Glasgow and Renfrew, in sending a representative to the legislature. Rutherglen gives the title of Earl to the Marquess of Queensberry. The fairs of this town have long been noted for a great show of horses, particularly the Lanarkshire breed, esteemed the best for draught in Scotland; they are held on the last Friday in April, the first Tuesday in May after Trinity-Sunday, the third Friday in July and August, the third Monday in October, and the third Friday in November (all old style).

SHOTTS AND CAMBUSNETHAN.

THE parish of SHOTTS lies in the north-east quarter of the county, and is ten miles in length by about seven in breadth; bounded by New Monkland on the north, Bothwell on the west, Cambusnethan on the south, and the county of Linlithgow on the east; the Anon and the Avon have their sources within the district, which is likewise watered by the streams of the North and South Calder. At an early period the parish was called 'Bertram-Shotts,' and was comprehended in the parish of Botwell, from which it was separated at the time of the reformation; and about the same period the denominative 'Bertram' was dropped. The original name is said to be derived from that of a noted robber, Bertram, or Bartram, the Rob Roy of his day; he was shot in the reign of Robert II, about half a mile east from the church, which spot still retains the appellation Shotts-burn. The village, called Kirk-o'-Shotts, stands on the south road, betwixt Edinburgh and Glasgow, in a bare and elevated part of the district. The new church was erected in 1820, in the centre of the parish, on a commanding site. The works of the Shotts Iron Company, the chief rival in Scotland to the manufactory at Carron, are situate about three miles and a half east of the church; a great number of hands are employed in this establishment; the company patronize a school (the pupils paying a small sum weekly), and provide a house rent-free for the master. There is another school here, endowed by the late Mr. Wilson, of Whiteburn.

CAMBUSNETHAN parish is situate in the middle ward of the county, on the north-east bank of the Clyde, from which it stretches, in an eastern direction, a distance of thirteen miles, by three in breadth. There are luxuriant orchards throughout this district, and the apples of Cambusnethan have long been in high estimation. Freestone, ironstone and coal abound beneath the surface of the land. The village stands on a cross road a little eastward of the thoroughfare from Glasgow to Lanark, fifteen miles from the former and nine from the latter town; the majority of its inhabitants are employed in weaving and its attendant occupations.

STRATHAVEN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF GLASSFORD AND STONEHOUSE.

STRATHAVEN is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Avenale; 44 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 15 s. by E. of Glasgow, 30 n. E. of Ayr, 21 E. by N. of Kilmarnock, 14 w. of Lanark, and 7½ s. of Hamilton; situate on the river Aven. The town is of considerable antiquity—but possesses no pretensions to elegance in its dwellings, or uniformity in the arrangement of them. Like many other towns, not only in the British Islands, but throughout the European continent, it seems to have been indebted for its origin to the feudal eras, when every chieftain had his castle or fortress for safety or aggression; the ruins of one of these frowning edifices, presenting 'shattered and haggard walls,' stand on an eminence to the south, overhanging Strathaven. The excellent breed of horses for which Lanarkshire is so much distinguished was introduced to this vicinity, upwards of a century ago, by a Duke of Hamilton, who brought some fine horses from Holstein, and placed them in the parks attached to the castle; from this origin, the race of draught cattle was propagated over the entire district. The offspring of the cow has also conferred distinction on this town: the herbage of the neighbourhood is supposed to be of a highly nutritious quality, and peculiarly adapted for the improvement of the flesh and milk of cattle; in consequence of this, Straven veal has long been held in high estimation, and a Straven calf is not unfrequently sold at almost as high a price as a cow reared upon some less favoured pasture. Strathaven is not a place of much trade; the most prominent branches are brewing and tanning, and the weaving process of cotton goods; there are two or three inns, and two banking establishments. The town was erected into a burgh of barony in the year 1450, in favour of the then powerful chief, William Earl Douglas, and is governed by a baron ballie.

Besides the national church, there are two relief chapels, an united associate synod meeting-house, and a chapel for independents. On the south side of the river Aven, a Roman road can be distinctly traced for several miles. Races are held annually in July, but one day generally terminates the amusements. The market, which is on Thursday, is well attended; fairs are held on the first Thursdays of January and March, Thursday in Whitsun week, the last Thursday of June, the second Thursday of August, and ('the old fair') on the second of November.

GLASSFORD village, in the parish of its name, is situate on the road betwixt Kilbride and Strathaven, two miles from the latter town. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton manufacture.

The village of STONEHOUSE is seven miles and a half from the town of Hamilton, situate near the south bank of the Aven. A little above the junction of the Kype water with that river is a beautiful and romantic waterfall, descending nearly fifty feet.

LINLITHGOWSHIRE,

OR WEST LOTHIAN, is a small county, of a very irregular figure, lying on the south shore of the Frith of Forth, having Edinburghshire on the east and south-east, Lanarkshire on the south-west, and Stirlingshire on the west. The Brieich and the Almond waters form the boundary line betwixt this county and that of Edinburgh, except at Mid-Calder, where the latter intrudes more than a mile into Linlithgowshire. From east to west (that is, along the shore of the Forth), the county extends sixteen miles; along its south-eastern boundary (or from Queensferry to its most easterly point), it measures about twenty: the superficial contents of the whole being about 121 square miles, or 77,440 English acres. Much that is applicable to the antiquities of, and historical events connected with this county, has been already sufficiently detailed in the annals of Edinburghshire and the capital, this district having formed, at an early period, a portion of the province of Lothian possessed by the Anglo-Saxons: some few particulars, more distinctly referable to this county, may, however, be here added. The Gadenii tribe of British people being overrun by the Romans, the latter formed a firm but not permanent settlement in the shire; the subjugated nations of the world had snapped their fetters—they even menaced the extinction of the Roman name; the legions were recalled to avert the catastrophe, and Britain was left exposed to the devastations of her more ferocious neighbours. During the residence of the Romans in West Lothian, which was the outermost part of their conquest in this direction, they gave a site to the wall which they built across the island. No part of Valentia was so well protected by forts. From the station at Cramond, a Roman road proceeded westward, along the shore of the Forth to Carriden, where the wall terminated; and along the sea shore were several posts, which, according to old historians were strengthened by towers, and stood the Bulwarks of the Roman sway in this part of Britain. In modern times there have been a variety of urns, coins and other relics of this conquering race discovered in the shire. It is understood that after the departure of the Romans and a good deal later, this part of Lothian became occupied by the Scoto-Irish and northern adventurers, in greater numbers than in that portion now called Edinburghshire. This county was probably separated into a sheriffdom in the reign of David I; it was placed by Robert, however, under the administration of a constable, and so it continued until the time of James IV. No other district appears to have been so divided into petty baronies, bailieries, regalities, and other independent jurisdictions; nor so domineered over by a number of peers inimical to peace and regardless of justice. The oldest family in the shire is that of Dundas, of Dundas, who can trace an unbroken line of descent and residence on the same spot up to the reign of William the Lion (1165), an antiquity rarely to be found surpassed, not only in Scotland, but in any other country.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The aggregate surface of Linlithgowshire is neither flat nor hilly: the most remarkable protuberances form a range running obliquely across the middle of the county; the central and western parts have the most hilly ground, while on the east and south the land is mostly level. The elevations are generally well clothed with verdure and ornamental woods; about one-third part of the whole county is either woodland, old pasture, or laid down with artificial grasses; and there are more than four-fifths of the shire enclosed. Until the year 1723, there was little improvement in the agriculture of the district; soon after this period, John Earl of Stair introduced new and advantageous modes of husbandry, and commenced the cultivation of the cabbage, turnip and carrot by the plough; the example of this nobleman was beneficially followed by Charles, first Earl of Hopetoun; but both dying, thirty years elapsed before agricultural spirit was again actively displayed. In more recent times, some practical farmers, possessing the advantage of skill and capital, have brought the cultivation of the shire to comparative perfection; and now this rich and lovely district participates in the general improvements of southern Caledonia. Linlithgowshire contains a store of minerals of the most useful kind: coal abounds throughout, limestone is equally prevalent, in some parts ironstone is also found in profusion, and the whole surface seems to rest on a bed of sandstone of the finest quality; silver and lead mines were formerly wrought; and there is plenty of marl, potters' clay, brick clay, and red chalk. Many places present volcanic appearances, particularly at Dundas Hill, in the parish of Dalmeny, where there is a bold front of basaltic rocks, exhibiting in some instances columns of that character. Of the MANUFACTURES of the shire, salt is the chief article; and there are considerable tanneries, breweries, distilleries and chymical works in the principal towns. The traffic in coal employs a great number of the inhabitants. This county is rather remarkable for the state of its population, having undergone less increase in its amount within the last eight years than most other districts, especially those which are more favoured by being the seat of manufactures. Besides this, the circumstance of stagnation, or at least but slow progress in population, may be attributed to its scarcity of large towns, and the general dependence on agriculture under a steady mode of farming.

RIVERS and MOUNTAINS.—The only river of consequence is the ALMOND (or Amond); but there are a number of considerable rivulets and burns, and the Forth yields advantages which amply compensate for the deficiency of river navigation. The Almond rises in the high grounds of Lanarkshire, and, pursuing a north-easterly course, falls into the sea at Cramond: at its mouth it assumes the appearance of a little loch or arm of the sea, running up the bottom of a woody ravine; but it is not navigable except for a very short distance, and that only for boats and small sloops. With the exception of Cairnapple, in the parish of Torphichen, which rises about fifteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, the mountains of this district are not of great altitude, nor are they numerous—Binny Craig and Cocklerue are the only other eminences that attract notice; they are respectively about five hundred feet high.

Linlithgowshire comprises eleven parishes and two parts of parishes, which, with two in Mid Lothian and four in Stirlingshire, form one presbytery. It contains two Royal Burghs, namely, LINLITHGOW and QUEENSFERRY; the next largest town is BATHGATE. Its sea-port is BO'NESS, and there are a number of thriving villages. The COUNTY returns one representative to parliament; and the burghs of LINLITHGOW, HAMILTON, LANARK, AIRDRIE and FALKIRK, in conjunction, send another member to the senate.

BATHGATE AND WEST CRAIGS.

BATHGATE is a market town and independent burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; situate on the middle road betwix Edinburgh and Glasgow, 18 miles w. of the former, 24 E. of the latter, and between five and six s. of Linlithgow. It occupies a pleasant site, near the southern base of a great ridge of hills, extending across the county and sheltering the town on the north and east; while it has a fine southern exposure, and is seen at a considerable distance from that direction and from the west. Bathgate lays claim to comparatively high antiquity: Malcolm IV granted to the monks of Holyrood the church of Bathkel, with the land belonging to it; at one period the town and its adjoining lands formed part of the ample possessions of Robert Bruce, which in 1306 he gave in dowry with his daughter Margery to Walter Stewart—and this marriage introduced the Stewart family to the throne of Scotland. The town consists of a new and an old part; the former is tolerably well built, and most of the streets are paved; it is abundantly supplied with water of an excellent quality, the property of the burgh; and it is lighted with gas, furnished by a joint stock company, at a moderate price. Bathgate was created a free burgh of barony by act of parliament in 1824, and placed under the control of a provost, three bailies, twelve concillors, a treasurer, a town clerk, and a procurator fiscal; the election of the magistrates takes place annually, in September, by the burghesses. A justice of peace court sits monthly. Of late years the town has acquired a large increase of population, in a great measure owing to the adjacent lime and coal works, but more particularly to the introduction of weaving cotton goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, which latter trade is conducted by resident agents.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and burgher, relief, and united secession meeting-houses. The burgh now boasts a superior educational institution in the Bathgate academy, endowed by the late John Newland, Esq., of Kingston, Jamaica, who was a native of this town: the sum bequeathed by this munificent gentleman amounted, previous to the erection of the building, to between £16 000 and £17,000; the academy is now fully established; it stands on a commanding and healthful site, in the immediate vicinity of the town, and is an extensive and elegant structure—it comprises five large class-rooms, library-room, and rector's house; the courses of education are conducted on the most approved systems by a rector and three other teachers, to whom will be added a fifth when the funds of the institution will allow of such an increase: the youth of the parish have thus the benefit of a first-rate instruction in all the useful and many of the more learned branches, free of expense; while others, not parishioners, have an opportunity of participating in the same advantages by means of very moderate fees. The parish school-house, which is situate near the academy, has a handsome appearance. The market day is Friday, when a large supply of grain of all kinds is brought from the surrounding country. The authorities of the burgh are entitled to hold seven annual fairs, namely, on the third Wednesdays of April, July and August, the first Wednesdays after Whitsuntide and Martinmas, and the fourth Wednesdays of June and October—all old style; the Whitsuntide and Martinmas fairs are the principal, and are well attended by cattle-dealers.

WEST CRAIGS is a small hamlet in the parish of Torphichen, about five miles and a half from Bathgate, seated in an agricultural district. The nearest place of worship stands five miles from the village; but a new church is at present in progress of erection, for the greater convenience of the inhabitants.

BORROWSTOUNNESS,

AND THE PARISH OF CARRIDEN, WITH THE VILLAGES OF GRANGE PANS & BLACKNESS.

BORROWSTOUNNESS (or, as it is now generally pronounced, Bo'ness), is an ancient sea-port town and burgh of barony in the parish of its name; 18 miles w. of Edinburgh, 9 w. of Queensferry, and three and a half from Linlithgow; situate on a piece of low ground on the south shore of the Frith of Forth; and consists principally of one street, the greater proportion of the houses forming which appear to be of a very old date. It possesses a good and safe harbour; and, before the canal from Grangemouth to Glasgow was completed, the port of Bo'ness was the only commodious one on this coast for foreign vessels to discharge their cargoes at. Among other advantages and conveniences belonging to the harbour, that of moderate port charges, and a patent slip of the best construction, may be mentioned: by the latter, vessels of from three to four hundred tons burden may be drawn out of the water, and the cradle will admit two at once; this important erection is under the superintcndence of the harbourmaster. Bo'ness is the chief place on the Forth for the manufacture of salt, of which article a considerable quantity is exported annually; besides these works, there are two distilleries, an earthenware manufactory, two iron-foundries, and chymical works. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the burgh, and he appoints a baillie for its government. The places of worship are a church of the establishment and an united secession meeting-house. The Roman wall of Antoninus, commonly called 'Graham's Dyke,' passes through the parish; and within a short distance of the town, to the south-east, the traces of a Roman camp are still visible. The village BORROWSTOUN lies about a mile inland from Bo'ness.

The parish of CARRIDEN is bounded by Bo'ness on the west, Abercorn on the east, and Linlithgow on the south; it lies on the south bank of the Forth, and is not more than two miles in length by one in breadth; the whole district is well enclosed and cultivated.

Within the parish, besides the village of Carriden, are those of GRANGE-PANS and BLACKNESS; the latter once celebrated for its castle, which, during the reign of James VI, was the principal state prison in Scotland, and as such received within its gloomy walls many distinguished persons: one of the most remarkable of its prisoners was Lord Ochiltree, who, for accusing the Marquess of Hamilton of aspiring to the Scottish crown, was here confined during nearly the whole reign of Charles I—upwards of twenty years—and was not liberated till the country fell under the dominion of Cromwell. The edifice was converted to the purposes of a barrack in the course of the late long-protracted war; it is still preserved in a sufficient degree of repair for the accommodation of a for master gunner and barrack-master.

LINLITHGOW AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

LINLITHGOW, popularly pronounced Lithgow, is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of the shire and parish to which it gives name, and the seat of the presbytery of Linlithgow; 16 miles w. of Edinburgh, 31 E. by N. of Glasgow, 8 E. of Falkirk, and three and a half from Bo'ness; situate upon the bank of a fine lake. It is chiefly formed of a single street, which lies east and west along the south edge of the water. The houses have, in general, an old and decayed, but yet substantial look, which indicates that the place has at a former time enjoyed great prosperity; and it still possesses a variety of objects that cannot fail to interest the attentive traveller, and impress the mind with an idea of its ancient grandeur: amongst these are the magnificent ruins of its royal palace, the venerable church adjoining, and the terrace on which both edifices were erected; the beautiful lake, the lofty trees, and the plantations scattered over the pleasure-grounds of its once famed palace. The latter stands on the site of a Roman station, and forms a square overlooking the lake to the north; it has been one of the noblest residences of royalty in Scotland; in it the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots was born, 8th December, 1542. The contiguous church is dedicated to St. Michael; it is a noble pile of Gothic architecture, and has a fine tower steeple: in this church is the seat formerly reserved for the monarchs of Scotland. A particular house here is pointed out to strangers as the place from whence Hamilton, of Bothwell-haugh, shot the regent

Murray; as is also the room in which the spectre is said to have appeared to King James, warning him to keep from the battle of Flodden Field. The town-house is an elegant structure, erected in the year 1668, with seven arches, of neat and fanciful workmanship, of cast iron, forming piazzas for public accommodation; the lower apartments of this building are used as the county gaol, over which the courts are held. Immediately opposite to the town-house is a fountain of singular and beautiful appearance, completed on the 4th of June, 1807, in imitation of the Cross Well, built in 1620: it is of hexagonal form, ascended by steps; the water descends from the top of the fountain, which is surmounted by a unicorn holding a shield; the stream falls into a basin, from whence it is spouted into a larger one through the mouths of six grotesque figures, whence it again issues through the jaws of six other images into a still more capacious receptacle, which is surrounded by statues attired in male and female ancient costumes; here all the streams are concentrated, and pass unperceived through a pillar—finding egress by another mouth in a copious gush, from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. The whole of this architectural curiosity is surrounded by iron palisades of light and elegant workmanship. Several other fountains, of simple formation, are to be seen in the town.

The soldiers of Cromwell are said to have introduced into this town the art of preparing leather—and tanning, currying, and shoemaking, may to this day be deemed the staples of the place. In the tanning branch there is one establishment, among several others, extensive and ingenious; it belongs to Messrs. Spence and Sons, who have erected a steam-engine, which is employed in the several purposes of grinding bark, heating the lakes and pumping water; the contrivance is considered worthy of the consummate in mechanical operations. The Union canal passes close by the south side of the town: an extensive basin of excellent masonry offers commodious accommodation to vessels trading on this canal; and a most beautiful aqueduct, unequalled in the united kingdom, conducts its water over the river Avon and a deep and extensive valley; it stands upon twelve arches, and adds much to the beauty of the surrounding scenery. In the reign of David I, Linlithgow was a burgh of regality; James V vested the government of it in a provost and four bai-lies—the council being composed of a dean of guild, twelve merchant councillors, and the deacons of the eight corporations of trades, namely, Smiths, Tailors, Baxters (bakers), Cordiners (shoemakers), Weavers, Wrights, Coppers, and Fleshers; besides which there are seven unincorporated trades. The burgh unites with Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie and Falkirk in returning a member to parliament.

Besides the established church before noticed, there are three other places of worship, namely, two united secession chapels and an independent meeting-house. A good grammar-school, a boarding academy, and two or three day-schools, afford instruction to the youth of the town. The market is held on Friday; the fairs on the first Friday after the second Tuesday of January, the 25th February, third Friday of April, second Tuesday of June, 2d August, and first Friday of November.

QUEENSFERRY,

OR, as it is sometimes called, SOUTH QUEENSFERRY (in contradistinction to North Queensferry, a harbour in Fifeshire,) is a royal burgh and parish, the latter being confined within the limits of the former; 9 miles west of Edinburgh and the like distance east of Bo'ness; situate betwixt the shore of the Frith of Forth and the ridge that rises from the coast. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having received its name from the queen of Malcolm Canmore (Margaret), who usually made choice of the ferry at this place for the passage of the Frith. Under her auspices the town increased in size, population and commerce; but in the present day it is not conspicuous for either: it has no foreign trade, and is chiefly supported by fishing throughout the winter. Its chief importance is derived from the ferry at Newhall (a little to the eastward of the town) over the Forth; there is another pier a short distance to the westward, for the convenience of boats when they cannot make the former point: they are both handsome slips or piers, and run a considerable distance into the water, whereby boats can effect a landing of passengers at all periods of the tide. At this place the Frith is contracted to a gut of two miles in width; and in the middle of the strait lies a small rocky island, called Inch Garvie. About half a mile to the westward is Port Edgar, so named from Prince Edgar having landed there: from this place his Majesty George IV, when on a visit to Scotland, embarked on his return to England. The Right Hon. the Earl of Rosebery having given a piece of ground for a bleach-green to the inhabitants, and also conveyed water into the town for their use, the magistrates and council, to evince their gratitude for these favours, have raised a tablet, with an appropriate inscription, over the fount. As a royal burgh, Queensferry is governed by a provost, a land bailie, two sea bailies, a dean of guild and a town council; the burgh unites with Stirling, Culross, Inverkeithing, and Dunfermline, in returning a member to parliament. A fair is held at this place on the 5th of August, except when that date falls on a Saturday or a Monday; when this happens, the fair is held on the Friday or Tuesday.

UPHALL, WITH BROXBURN AND ECCLESMACHAN.

THE parish of UPHALL is bounded by Kirkliston on the north-east and east, by Mid-Calder on the south, Livingston on the west, and Linlithgow and Ecclesmachan on the north. It is intersected from west to east by the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh; and it is watered by a rivulet called BROXBURN, on which and the public road stands the straggling village of the same name, at the distance of ten miles from Edinburgh and seven from Linlithgow. The western extremity of the village is crossed by the Union canal from Edinburgh. In the chancel of Uphall church are deposited the remains of the Hon. Henry Erskine, as also those of the late Lord Chancellor Erskine. This parish abounds in coal, sandstone, limestone and ironstone. The district is chiefly of an upland character; but it is under the best process of agriculture and enclosure, and possesses some large plantations.

The small parish of ECCLESMACHAN lies south of Abercorn and east of Linlithgow, about five miles from the latter town and two from Uphall: it is four miles in length by only one in breadth; is watered by a tributary of the Almond; and near the church is a weak sulphureous spring, called the Bullion Well, the waters of which are said to be efficacious in the cure of scrofulous affections. The parish, a flat corn country, is altogether under cultivation, and based on freestone.

WHITEBURN, BLACKBURN, LIVINGSTONE, AND LONGRIDGE.

WHITEBURN, or WHITEBURN, is a village in the parish of its name, 21 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 10 s. of Linlithgow, and four from Bathgate; situate on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It is a regularly built little place, and thrives by the weaving of cotton goods for the Glasgow manufacturers. It contains a public library of twelve hundred volumes, and a handsome school-house—the latter built by the trustees of the late Mr. Wilson, who bequeathed a considerable part of his property for the laudable purpose of erecting and supporting charity-schools in this district. Within the parish are two other villages, called EAST WHITEBURN and LONGRIDGE. The parish is watered by the Almond, the Brieich, and two smaller rivulets. There is much moss and pasture land in the upper portion; in the lower division, on the contrary, the surface is arable, and admirably planted and enclosed.

The parish of LIVINGSTONE stretches from five to six miles along the north bank of the Brieich water, which separates it from Edinburghshire, by a breadth of from one to nearly two miles, one of the roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow passes through the parish, which is well enclosed. The hamlet of Livingstone, which consists of only a few detached dwellings, is six miles from Whiteburn; and two miles from Livingstone is the small village of BLACKBURN, seated on the banks of a rivulet of the same name: it contains a cotton-mill, which employs a considerable number of persons of both sexes; and another for spinning linen yarn, the manufacture of thread, &c.

NAIRNSHIRE.

THIS is a small maritime county in the north-eastern part of Scotland, once forming a portion of the ancient province of Moray. It is bounded on the north by the Moray Frith, on the east by the shire of Elgin (or Moray), and on the south and west by the county of Inverness. It extends from the coast, on the north, to the small lake of Lochindorb (situate at its extreme southern apex), on the south, twenty miles; the breadth along the shore is twelve miles, and its sides vary from twelve to twenty-two miles asunder. The shire comprises one hundred and ninety-five square miles of land, and three of lakes; of uncultivated land there are about 87,000 acres, and of cultivated about 37,800.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The agricultural properties of Nairnshire assimilate so closely with those of the county of Elgin (described at page 372), that but brief notice of its wealth and capabilities in this respect is here necessary. Exclusive of the hilly part of the district, it may be described as a narrow border of level ground, along the shore, from one to nearly six miles in breadth—and here, for the most part, it is arable; but as the country recedes farther from the coast, it becomes bleak and hilly: there are, however, no eminences of great altitude or note in the whole county. The farms are usually small, and most frequently unenclosed. Sheep and black cattle are reared in considerable numbers, and chiefly fed on the natural pasturage. The county is crossed, in its southern or hilly part, by the river Findhorn, which runs in a direction from south-west to north-east; parallel with this rapid stream, about eight or nine miles to the west, courses the river Nairn, which also runs into the Moray Frith. Besides the rivers, there are several small brooks, whose banks are covered with woods and plantations; and there are some elegant seats scattered over the country.

Small as this shire is, it possesses a distinct political and judicial establishment. It comprises three complete parochial divisions, with seven parts of parishes; and contains one Royal Burgh, NAIRN, which is the only town. This burgh, in conjunction with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres, sends a member to parliament; and the county unites with Elginshire in returning another representative.

Note.—(a) A small part of Calder parish is in Inverness-shire; the entire parish contains 1,184 inhabitants.
(b) Croy parish is partly in Inverness-shire; the whole contains 1,664 inhabitants.
(c) The parish of Daviot and Dunlichty is chiefly in Inverness-shire, and was there wholly entered until the census of 1831; the entire parish contains 1,788 inhabitants, of which number 147 only are in Nairnshire.
(d) The united parishes of Dyke and Moy are, with the exception of thirteen inhabitants (taken in Nairnshire in 1831), in the shire of Elgin; the entire parish contains 1,451 inhabitants.
(e) The united parishes of Moy and Dalrossie are mostly in Inverness-shire; they contain 1,089 inhabitants.
(f) Petty parish was wholly entered in Inverness-shire until 1831, when eighty-three inhabitants were returned as resident in the county of Nairn; the entire parish contains 1,826 inhabitants.
(g) Urquhart parish is partly in Ross-shire; and contains in the whole 2,864 inhabitants.

The total annual value of Real Property in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £14,902; but this is exclusive of parts of the parishes of Daviot and Dunlichty, Dyke and Moy, Petty, and Urquhart, for which no assessment appears in the government returns for Nairnshire; the value of these parishes will appear in the counties to which they chiefly belong.

NAIRN,

A ROYAL Burgh, the capital of the above county and of the parish of its name, is 155 miles N. of Edinburgh, 103 W. by N. of Aberdeen, 32 W. of Fochabers, 23 W. of Elgin, 18 N.E. of Inverness, and 11 E. of Forres; situate on the coast of the Moray Frith, upon the left bank of the Nairn, at the confluence of that river with the sea. The town is composed of one main street, near the centre of which is a handsome building, erected about 1818, containing the town and county gaol, and a town and county court-room; the latter, which is spacious and elegant, is occasionally used as a ball-room: the pile, which is built of fine freestone (obtained in great plenty in the neighbourhood), is surmounted by a spire. The town is connected with the right bank of the Nairn by a good bridge, which, as well as the harbour, and a handsome pier erected by subscription (aided by government), were, in the year 1829, much injured by the calamitous Moray floods, the pier having been nearly swept away; the inhabitants, calculating on the aid of the Fishery Board, are again strenuously exerting themselves to procure its restoration, satisfied that the prosperity of the town mainly depends on their success: for, were a good pier provided, the general trade of the place would, it is anticipated, rapidly increase, and give encouragement to the establishment of a ferry between Nairn and Cromarty, by which means the intercourse between the northern and southern sides of the Firth would be beneficially promoted. At present, coals, groceries, haberdashery, &c., form the principal imports; the exports consist of fish and a considerable quantity of fir-wood. The herring fishery and curing process is carried on here successfully, and salmon fishing is also prosecuted. Nairn is much resorted to in summer as comfortable bathing quarters, being supplied with convenient hot, cold and shower baths, as well as an inviting beach for those preferring the open sea. The accommodation provided at the hotel for the 'harvest home' meeting is such as to render it the rendezvous of the gay and fashionable every autumn. There are two branch banks settled here—the one of the National Bank of Scotland, the other of the British Linen Company. A passage-boat plies between this town and Cromarty weekly, and a daily communication is maintained with Grantown by the running of a gig-mail.

At what period Nairn was erected into a royal burgh is uncertain; the oldest charter extant is that obtained from James VI, in the year 1589, being the renewal of one granted by Alexander; Charles II confirmed the charter of James, and vested the government of the burgh in a town council, consisting of seventeen members, namely, the provost, three bailies, a dean of guild and treasurers, with eleven councillors, nine of which make a quorum; the whole of the trades form but one corporation. The burgh unites with Inverness, Fortrose and Forres in returning a member to parliament.

The places of worship are the parish church, and a chapel each for seceders and independents. The town is well provided with institutions for instruction: in addition to the parochial establishment, there have been erected, within these few years, at the western approach to the burgh, an elegant academy, for the education of more advanced pupils; with a sessional and a monitory school for the children of the more humble class—both being, in fact, founded in charity: there is likewise an excellent female seminary, well conducted and attended. Indeed, as regards good and cheap education, Nairn merits a conspicuous station; it also possesses several religious, benevolent, and literary societies, which are respectably supported. At the western extremity of the town, adjoining the parish school, a neat monument was erected, some years since, to the memory of Mr. John Straith, who was forty years schoolmaster, as a tribute of respect by his numerous scholars. The weekly markets are Tuesday and Wednesday; and the fairs are held on the third Friday of April; the 19th June, if Tuesday, or on the first Tuesday after the 19th; the 13th August, or on the first lawful day after the market of Campbelltown; on the fourth Tuesday of September; on the Friday after the third Tuesday of October; and on the first Friday of November.

THE ORKNEY ISLES,

KNOWN to the ancients by the name of Orcades, are situate in the Northern Sea, separated from Caithness-shire, in Scotland, by the strait of the sea called the Pentland Frith, and lying between the parallels of 58° 44' and 59° 25' n. latitude, and 2° 30' w. longitude; from the coast of Scotland they are distant four leagues, and from the Shetland Isles about fifteen. The whole of the Orkneys have been estimated at 150,000 square acres; of these there were, at no distant date, 90,000 in uncultivated commons, 30,000 in field pastures and meadow, 24,000 in tillage, 4,000 covered with fresh water, and 2,000 occupied by buildings and gardens. The form of the islands, from the operations of the ocean and the rapidity of the tides, is extremely irregular; and from this circumstance the dimensions of some of them are ascertained with difficulty. They are separated from one another by portions of water denominated 'sounds,' 'friths,' or 'ferries,' some of which are only a mile broad, whilst others are more than five: though thus closely connected together, the whole of them are of considerable extent; for, from the south-west to the north-east, the points farthest removed from each other, the distance is not less than seventy miles, and they are upwards of forty in another direction. The earliest inhabitants of these islands appear to have been Picts, a tribe originally Scandinavian, who, at an unknown period before the Christian era, established themselves in the northern and western parts of Scotland. Diodorus Siculus mentions Cape Orcas as one of the extremities of Britain; and the Orcades are first named, in the second century, by Pomponius Mela, who states their number at thirty—Pliny augments them to forty, but Ptolemy makes them only thirty; Tacitus asserts that the Orcades were discovered and subdued by Agricola, which implies that they were then inhabited. The origin of the name is undoubtedly Teutonic, and is probably derived from Orkn, a large marine animal—a term that has been applied both to whales and seals: ORKNEY, therefore, appears to mean the 'land of whales' or of 'seals.' The Orcades seem to have been esteemed of some importance in the time of Constantine, as they are especially mentioned with Gaul and Britain as the patrimony of his youngest son. Little is known of the Orcades from that time until the convulsions in Norway, which ended in the elevation of Harold 'the Fair-haired' to the undivided sovereignty of that country. About the middle of the ninth century Kenneth Macalpin obtained possession of the islands, and they continued with the Scottish throne until the end of the eleventh century, when they were assigned by King Donald Bane to the King of Norway, to whom they were subject until the middle of the thirteenth century, when they were again transferred by Magnus, King of Norway, to Alexander, King of Scotland; but, although these islands were thus ceded, the Norwegians still asserted their right to them, until the year 1470, when James III of Scotland married Margaret, daughter of the King of Denmark, with whom they again passed, in lieu of her dowry, to the crown of Scotland; and upon the birth of her son, James IV, they were finally ceded, which was afterwards confirmed when James IV of Scotland married Ann, daughter of the King of Denmark. Subsequent to this period, the islands passed into the possession of the English crown, and were bestowed by Charles I, and afterwards by Charles II, on the Morton family; in 1776 Lord Morton sold them to Sir Lawrence Dundas, and they have since remained in the family of his descendant. Having been so long and so repeatedly in the possession of the Danes and Norwegians, many names of persons as well as places are derived from the Danish or Scandinavian language. It will be comprehended that the Orcadians bear no resemblance whatever to the Celtic Highlanders, in language, dress, appearance or customs. The whole body of the inhabitants may be divided into three classes: the first consists of the gentry, or proprietors of land, with such as have gained a competent fortune by means of industry; the second is formed of those who are denominated tradesmen and shopkeepers; and the third comprises all such as are, for the most part, employed in the cultivation of the soil, and are either farmers with servants, or what are termed cotters or cottagers. Orkney has given birth to some individuals who have attained to eminence in science, literature and the arts; of these we may particularly allude to Malcolm Laing, Esq., author of a well-known History of Scotland, and Mrs. Brunton, authoress of 'Self-Control,' 'Discipline,' &c.

SOIL, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—Compared with the sterile wilds in some of the sister islands to the north, or even with the lofty hills and bleak marshy plains to the south of them, these isles gain so much that their appearance is favourable and inviting; to the eye their surface presents a rich and pleasing variety. It is conjectured by some (and there are circumstances which strongly tend to corroborate the conjecture) that these islands were, at some distant period, part of the main land of Scotland. The hills composing the ridge that skirts the Western Ocean, as well as those that intersect the Mainland and occupy some of the other islands, are seldom single and detached, but for the most part are formed into ridges of some extent, with small intervening valleys; and their tops, instead of rising high into a conical form, are generally either flat or rounded. Some few of them are almost entirely covered with verdure; the bottoms of most of them consist of corn fields, interspersed with patches of rich old grass, affording excellent feeding for cattle; the soil is composed of sandy or clay loam: their sides produce an admirable mixture of heath and grass for sheep pasture, on a thin stratum of peat moss; while their tops are usually brown, on a bottom of peat moss, clay or gravel. There are spots on some of them delightfully romantic, where the attention is arrested and the ear pleased by the murmurs of the rills, and the eye feasted on flowers that shed their fragrance around. But what is of much more consequence, Providence, ever bountiful in adding to the comforts of man, has, with no sparing hand, spread peat moss over a considerable portion of these islands. The ancient rude modes of cultivation are now abandoned, and the implements of husbandry have been materially improved; but much of the land under tillage is not regularly fenced, nor divided into separate fields: the spirit of improvement is now, however, generally diffused throughout the islands, and regular enclosures are becoming more frequent. The grain almost exclusively cultivated in Orkney is either oats and beans, or an inferior sort of barley. The herring fishery has been lately introduced, and is now carried on with great spirit and to a considerable extent; the principal 'stations' are Papa Stronsay, Deersonnd, Holm, Burray, and South Ronaldshay. The average quantity cured is about one hundred thousand barrels, which are sent to the various markets in Ireland, Scotland and England; a few only being sent abroad, direct from Orkney, except the produce of the early fishery, which is carried on in the neighbourhood of Stromness—and from that place the herrings are dispatched direct to Hamburg. The cod and ling fisheries are also prosecuted, by various descriptions of craft, from almost all the islands; but the withdrawal of the bounty has been severely felt by the islanders, who, in expectation (if not on the faith) of its continuance, had embarked their little all in boats or vessels for pursuing the fishery.

CLIMATE.—Throughout the whole of the islands, rain falls in considerable quantity, especially on the western coasts; and it is supposed that the annual amount showered upon these islands averages twenty-six inches. Snows are neither so frequent nor so heavy; but they come with comparative violence, and generally from the north-west and south-east; but though what falls in the course of a year may not be much short of the quantity in other northern latitudes, it continues only a few days at a time on the surface of the earth. A peculiarity of the climate, with respect to the season of snow and hail, merits some attention:—some part of the month of June, which in Britain is well known to be of a pleasant and genial warmth, is here not only colder than the preceding months, but almost as much so as any month in winter; for two weeks, and even sometimes more, about the middle of June, the wind blows from the north, strong and piercing, accompanied with snow and hail showers; but, as soon as that period is past, the wind veers round, and warm showers succeed.

According to a survey taken by Mr. Murdo Mackenzie, in 1750, the whole number of islands under the denomination of the Orkneys amounted to sixty-seven, of which the following (twenty-nine) only are inhabited:—Mainland (or Pomona), Græmsay, Hoy, Waas, Rassa, Fara, Cava, Flota, South Ronaldshay, Swaney, Pentland Skerry, Burray, Lambholm, Copinsay, Shapinshay, Stronsay, Papa Stronsay, Edey, Fairey, Sandey, North Ronaldshay, Westray, Papa Westray, Eglshay, Rousay, Weir, Enhallow, Gairsay, and Damsay: the remaining thirty-eight, which in the primitive language of the country are termed 'holms,' are much inferior in size, and solely appropriated to pasturage. The Orkneys comprise twenty-six parishes; the only two towns are KIRK WALL, which is the capital and a Royal Burgh, and STROMNESS, a Burgh of Barony. The isles of Orkney and Shetland form one sheriffdom or stewartry; the duty is principally performed by the sheriff depute, whose authority extends over all, whilst that of the sheriff substitute is confined to Shetland. Combined they form one county, under the title of the County of Orkney and Shetland, which returns one member to the imperial parliament; the present representative (1837) is Thomas Balfour, Esq., the younger, of Renwick. KIRK WALL, the capital of the Orkneys, is a representative burgh, joining with Wick, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty, in sending another member.

Note.—(a) Egilsbay island was included with Rousay in 1801;—in 1811 it contained 170; in 1821, 226; and in 1831, 228 persons. Enhallow was also included with Rousay in 1801 and 1811;—in 1821 it contained 11, and in 1831, 20 inhabitants. No returns were made for Gairsay in 1801 and 1811;—in 1821 it contained 79 inhabitants, and, in 1831, 69.
(b) Burness parish is in the island of Sanda.
(c) If the population of Egilsbay and Enhallow islands in 1831 be added to Rousay for that year, an increase will be found instead of a decrease.
(d) No returns were made for the parishes of Cross, Ladykirk, St. Peter's, and St. Nicholas, for 1801.
(e) Weir island was included with Rousay in 1801 and 1811.
(f) Flotta was included with Walls island in 1811.
(g) This number (3490) does not exhibit the actual increase in the Isles for thirty years, inasmuch as the amount of population of several places is not returned for 1801.

The total annual value of Real Property, in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £12,479.

KIRKWALL,

THE capital of the Orkney Islands and of the united parishes of Kirkwall and St. Ola, is a town of great antiquity, a royal burgh, and the seat of a synod and presbytery; 353 miles from Edinburgh by land and 241 by steam-navigation, 58 from Wick, 54 from Thurso, 41 from Huna Ferry (the most northerly part of Great Britain), and 14 from Stromness; situate about the centre of an island, called, by way of pre-eminence, Mainland, or Pomona, and on the south-east of the bay of Kirkwall. The town bears strong characteristics of antiquity: the principal street is exceedingly inconvenient from its narrowness, being in some places barely wide enough to afford passage for a cart; the houses are generally ranged with their ends or gables towards the street, which gives the town a singular if not an awkward appearance; many of these houses, too, both externally and internally, present striking features of old age—the doors and windows are small, the walls of great thickness, and the apartments narrow and gloomy; the modern dwellings, however, form an exception to this style, and many of them vie with the most commodious habitations of any other place of the same extent in Scotland. The town is divided into two parts, respectively termed the Old Town and the New Town; the former bends along the bay, while the latter stretches a considerable way to the southward. A rivulet, which is crossed by a stone bridge of one arch, passes through the town. The most conspicuous building in Kirkwall is the cathedral of Saint Magnus, which majestically lifts its head, and excites the admiration of every stranger: it was founded by Ronald, Count of Orkney, in 1138, in honour of and dedicated to his uncle, St. Magnus, and (though the work of different ages, and brought to completion under various superintendencies) must be admitted to be an edifice not only grand and simple, but also surprisingly regular and uniform—and is certainly a most imposing ornament and object of pride to these northern islands. The edifice contains upwards of seven hundred sittings—one hundred of which, however, are so inconveniently placed that the occupiers of them cannot see the minister; subscriptions have lately been commenced for the erection of another and more commodious place of worship. The ancient church of St. Ola, which it is believed existed prior to the foundation of that of St. Magnus, and was then the only religious establishment, stood near the shore of the road or bay of Kirkwall: around its site many of the houses are of such very antiquated appearance and construction as to allow of the conjecture that these dwellings, from their situation, originally obtained the appellation of Kirkiovog, or the 'Kirk on the bay,' subsequently corrupted (or perhaps merely altered, in consequence of only the walls of the old church remaining,) to Kirkwall. Opposite the cathedral, on the west side of the street, are the ruins of a fortress, designated 'the King's Castle,' which time and the havoc of war have nearly levelled with the dust; it was a place of considerable strength in 1581, when, or soon after, it was occupied by the infamous Earl of Orkney, natural son of James V. Almost adjoining to the dilapidated fragments of this fortress stand the much more interesting and ancient remains of the bishop's palace. Kirkwall was created a royal burgh in the first instance by James III, and its charter was renewed by James V; its government is confided to a provost, four bailies, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and fifteen councillors: it is a representative burgh, and unites with Tain, Wick, Doronoch, Dingwall and Cromarty, in returning a member to parliament; the present representative is James Loch, Esq. The town-hall is a handsome building, supported on pillars forming a piazza in front; the first story is divided into apartments for a common prison, the second for an assembly hall, with a large room adjoining for the courts of justice, and the highest is set apart as a freemasons' lodge. The sheriff and commissary courts are held in Kirkwall, and the synod of Orkney holds its meetings here. A court for the recovery of small debts is held before the justices on the first Wednesday in every month; the quarter sessions are held on the first Wednesdays of January, April, July and October; the sheriff's court is open every Thursday during the sitting of the supreme court, and oftener when necessary; and the burgh and dean of guild courts hold their sittings at requisite and convenient intervals.

The harbour of Kirkwall is safe and commodious; it has two excellent piers, and the outer bay affords good anchorage ground; altogether the situation of the place well adapts it for the resort of shipping. The town is supplied with coals principally from Newcastle. The making of kelp is carried on rather extensively. Of late years Kirkwall has become justly celebrated for the manufacture of straw plat, of a beautiful description. The straw produced in the Orkneys is considered superior to the foreign article—it certainly is finer: a bonnet was made for her present Majesty, Queen Adelaide, in the sewing of which upwards of 300,000 stitches were set; several medals, and other prizes, have been awarded to various individuals, of the Orkney isles, excelling in this branch of industry. Among other manufactures may be particularized those of ropes and sail-cloth, fishers' hemp, and distilling; there is likewise some boat-building, &c. The town supports several educational establishments, including a grammar-school, and others on charitable foundations or instituted by societies. A handsome building, to be called the 'Orkney Hospital,' is now being erected; it is founded by John Balfour, of Treneby, Esq., for the relief of the sick, and as an asylum for a certain number of aged and infirm persons. 'Kirkwall Fair' is a market of great antiquity, and noted for the variety and extent of its transactions; it may in some degree be compared to the fair of Leipsic, being attended by merchants and purchasers from a very great distance, particularly from Edinburgh and Glasgow: the fair is held on the first Tuesday after the 11th of August, and continues during that and the succeeding week.

STROMNESS

IS a burgh of barony and sea-port, 14 miles from Kirkwall, situate, as that town is, on the Mainland (or Pomona Island) of the Orkneys, adjoining the sound of Hoy, opposite Greenays island. This place, which has risen within the last century from being a fishing hamlet, composed of a few scattered huts, to a populous town, owes its increase to its admirable harbour and convenient position, by which it is rendered a place of safe resort, in these stormy seas, to vessels of all nations trading with the north of the eastern or western hemispheres. Its harbour is, indeed, a great attraction. This fine natural basin, extending from south to north more than a mile, is sheltered from the Atlantic on the west by a high ridge of moorish ground, the southern extremity of which forms the north side of Hoy sound; while its entrance is protected partly by the green island of Græmsay, which lies midway in the sound, and partly by a ness or point of land that stretches out from the westward, and covers it from the force of tide and tempest in Hoy sound. On the east side it is defended by two small islands or holms which extend along the back of it; and even beyond these, in a sort of outer harbour or roadstead, there is excellent anchorage for shipping. It is no uncommon thing, in the spring months, to see in these havens upwards of fifty large vessels, on their way to the whale fishery in Davis's straits and off Greenland; they call here for the purpose of completing their complement of men, which is generally about twenty for each ship; in some years there are upwards of seven hundred men furnished from this port for Davis's straits, besides one hundred and fifty apprentices; and a thousand men are engaged in the herring fishery, and employed by the Hudson's Bay Company, who have a resident agent. In this harbour captains may be supplied with necessaries to prosecute their voyage; and for repairs of vessels the most efficient and expeditious means are afforded by a new patent slip; to Mr. Stanger the port is indebted for this important additional accommodation: the machinery of the slip is of the most substantial description, and by its mechanical power a ship of five hundred tons can be taken into the yard. A very extensive warehouse has been erected at the north end of the town; and there is an excellent pier, with eighteen feet water at spring tides. There are eighteen vessels, averaging one hundred tons register, belonging to the port, all of which are employed in the coasting trade. Boat and ship building is carried on here, and the manufacture of straw plat employs a considerable number of females. There are two principal inns in this progressively prosperous town, and a branch of the National Bank of Scotland.

Stromness is a very irregularly built town: the habitations have been erected without any regard to uniformity or arrangement, generally as near the sea as possible; some are even within flood-mark, and protected by bulwarks, quays and jetties, which each individual appears to have constructed as suited his own convenience and taste. This range of buildings forms a narrow street, never exceeding twelve feet in width, and in many places much narrower; it runs in a zig-zag direction, and is ill paved with flag-stones of unequal sizes. Stromness is an independent burgh of barony, by a charter which it holds from the crown, granted in March, 1817; under it the government is vested in two bailies and nine councillors. The market day is Wednesday; there is an annual fair held on the first Tuesday in September, which continues for more than a week, and is attended by tradesmen with goods from Edinburgh, Glasgow and other places, in some respects resembling the fair at Kirkwall; there are also two cattle markets or fairs in May and October.

POST OFFICE, South end, Alexander Davidson, Post Master.—Letters from KIRKWALL arrive every Monday, Wednesday and Friday (weather permitting), and are despatched on the same days.

THE SHETLAND ISLES,

OR ZETLAND ISLES—a group of islands, islets and rocks, situate in the Northern Ocean, about fifteen leagues north-east of the Orkneys, and forty-four west of Bergen, in Norway; lying between 59° 48' 30", and 60° 52', north latitude, and between 1° 52' and 1° 57' west longitude from London. By a statistical table of Scotland it appears that, of the 855 square miles of land in Shetland, there were, about thirty years since, 21,888 acres cultivated, and 525,312 acres of hills, mosses, &c., or a proportion of four acres in the hundred under tillage. There are three principal islands in the group, namely, Mainland, Yell (on the north), and (still farther north-east) Unst; on the east of Yell lies Fetlar, which is the largest of the inferior islands; the next in point of size is Bressay; the smaller ones are Whalray, Out Skerries, Samphray, Big Island, Mickle Roe, Papa-Stour, House, Barray, Trondray, besides a great number of islets, holms and skerries. The history of Shetland is so much involved in that of Orkney, as to render an enlarged notice of its early ages unnecessary. That the Romans visited the coasts of Shetland is highly probable, from the coins of that people which have been discovered—those are of Galba, Vespasian, Trajan, and Ælius Cæsar; and the remains of a small Roman camp are to be traced on the island of Fetlar. There seems to be little doubt but these islands were first inhabited by the Norwegians, the laws having been administered by 'udalars,' who acted as a sort of petty princes. In the year 875, Harold Harfager, or the 'Fair-haired,' subdued these islands, and gave them to Count Sigurd, who was the first Earl of Orkney, from whom sprang the true Scandinavian dynasty of the Earls of Orkney and Shetland—the latter country being at first too insignificant to be included in the title, although it was included in the grant. On the accession of the Zetland Isles to the Scottish crown, the laws of the former were gradually encroached upon by the oppressive endeavours of the Scotch earls to introduce feudal subjection and seigniorage, in place of the ancient udale tenners. From 1468, when a marriage was concerted between the Scottish monarch, James III, and the Princess of Denmark (when Orkney and Shetland were pledged to the royal husband), to the time when the two countries passed to the English crown, in the persons of Charles I and II, and afterwards to the Earl of Morton (who sold the estate to Sir Lawrence Dundas), nothing occurs relating to the possession of Shetland distinct from that which has been already noticed in Orkney. Of its derivative we are informed that Shetland was first named Hiattlandia—and hence arose Yeltaland: another name was Hetland, signifying 'the high' or 'lofty land;' and from this word, according to the Norwegian writers, the name of 'Shetland' or 'Zetland' was obtained.

SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The general aspect of the country is bleak and barren; and although there is but little to attract in the form of landscape, in what may be called the interior of the islands—the whole of them being destitute of wood—yet their coast scenery presents views of a highly interesting character; and the summer tourist, who may be content to leave behind him for a while the rich luxuriance of an English landscape (to which his eye has, perhaps, been long familiarized), and take a peep at nature in her more wild and romantic guise, will find, in the diversified appearance and picturesque grandeur of the coast of Shetland, ample gratification. Last summer (1836) a fine powerful steam-packet, which was put on the Leith, Aberdeen, Caithness and Orkney station, made a few experimental trips once a fortnight to Shetland: the result was so far from discouraging, that we understand, her visits will be repeated this year. The want of roads is much felt by the inhabitants of Shetland; this deficiency is, however, in some measure remedied by the use of boats on the numerous fine 'voes' which penetrate far into the interior: in travelling by land, the small ponies, or 'shelties' as they are called, pursue their way across the wastes without much difficulty. The cattle of Shetland are of a very diminutive breed: a cow is said to weigh from two to three hundred weight upon an average; an ox from three to four, but seldom exceeding five hundred weight. A great abundance of poultry is kept on almost every farm, small swine are very numerous, and in the south of the Mainland rabbits burrow in considerable numbers. The sheep are very small, but produce wool of an excellent quality, which is knit into stockings, gloves and mits: the fleece, which is remarkably soft, has been wrought into stockings of so fine a texture, as to have been known to sell as high as forty shillings a pair; the common price, however, is from three to four shillings; but some may be obtained so low as six-pence, and even five-pence per pair. The precarious and scanty corn-harvest of Shetland is rarely finished until the end of October or even of November. The fuel in general use is peat, the cutting and drying of which occupies diligent attention. The highest land in these islands is Roeness Hill, which attains an elevation of 1,447 feet; the Hill of Foula is next in altitude, being about 1,300 feet above the level of the sea. The chief support of the Zetlander is dependent on the white-fishery—herring, cod and ling abounding on these coasts; besides which, about eight hundred to one thousand men are employed every season in the Davis's Straits whale fishery, in vessels fitted out in England and Scotland, who call here to complete their crews, and who reland the men on their return from their perilous occupation. The crews of numerous boats are also engaged in angling for the small fry of the coal-fish, or gadus carbonarius—known in Shetland by the name of 'sethe'; these swarm in myriads within the numerous creeks and sounds of this northern archipelago: they first appear in May, scarcely more than an inch long; about August they become abundant, measuring about eight inches in length; and in the early part of the following year they attain the ordinary size of the cod-fish: a profitable fishery of them then takes place, in deep tide-ways, under the term of 'sethes.' These are a most valuable fish to the Shetlanders; they supply them with food at all seasons, almost at their very doors—and with light during their long, dark and dreary winters, the liver of this providentially designed animal yielding a copious supply of oil.

The Shetland Isles form twelve parochial divisions, composing two presbyteries and a synod. The only town in this portion of the northern group is LERWICK—besides it, there are only a few villages and hamlets on the shores. The islands now pay their proportion of the land-tax, and in every other respect have become subject to British laws; they are represented in parliament (as has been already noticed) in connexion with the Orkneys, to which sheriffdom they belong.

LERWICK AND SCALLOWAY.

LERWICK, the principal town in Shetland, is (by steam navigation) 272 miles from Edinburgh, 166 from Peterhead (Aberdeenshire), 126 from Wick, and 95 from Kirkwall; situate on the east coast of Mainland, or largest island of the group. It bears the name of the bay on whose margin it is built; and that, in its turn, derives its name from a long narrow inlet on the opposite shore of the island of Bressay, called Lera-voe, and remarkable for its extensive deposit of clay and mud: a projecting point at the entrance to Lera-voe is called Lera-ness; and the whole bay, including the roadstead of Bressay sound, is named Lerwick, which signifies 'the bay of clay' or 'mud'—compounded of Islandic leir, Danish leer ('clay, mud'), and Suio Gothic wik, Danish wig, (an arm of the sea, an anchorage). The site of the town, comprising a lunated segment of the sea-shore of nearly half a mile in length, and becoming gradually more elevated as it recedes from the coast-line, presents the appearance of a perfect amphitheatre, and, when viewed from the opposite anchorage, the effect is singularly picturesque. The principal street extends through the whole length of the town, following the curvature of the sea-shore; and numerous lanes or closes, constructed at right angles with it, lead to a spacious road, or half-formed street, on the eminence above the town. The houses are built of a species of grey sandstone which abounds in the immediate vicinity, and which is both of considerable beauty and great durability; many of them are handsome mansions, and in general they are far superior to those of the sister town of Kirkwall, in Orkney; but here, as in Kirkwall, the houses (with the exception of those very recently erected) seem to have dropped by accident into their respective localities—their owners having apparently been indifferent whether fronts or backs, gables or corners, were planted towards the street; in several places, also, the buildings project so far into the main street, that there is scarcely room for a wheel-carriage to pass: it is gratifying, however, to perceive, and it is creditable to the present municipal rulers of the burgh, that all the more offensive of these obstructions are in course of being removed. The principal public buildings are the town-house, Fort Charlotte, the parish church, and the subscription rooms: the first of these is an old structure, containing the sheriff-court-room, an office for the records of the sheriff-court, a hall for the meetings of the commissioners of supply (also used as a masonic lodge), and the county gaol. Fort Charlotte stands on a rocky eminence at the northern extremity of the town, its guns commanding the whole range of the anchorage, from the south to the north entrance of the harbour; it was originally built in the reign of Charles II, but, having been dismantled and allowed to fall into a state of dilapidation, it was rebuilt in 1781, and then received its present name in honour of the consort of George III: it is a handsome specimen of military architecture, and is said to be of strength sufficient to protect the town against a small squadron of frigates; at present a hombardier has charge of the works and stores. The parish church, which was erected a few years ago, is situate above the town, towards its southern extremity; it is a substantial building, with a Doric front of hewn stone; but, in consequence of the flatness of its roof and the want of a spire, its external appearance is somewhat ponderous: internally, however, it is both tastefully and commodiously fitted up. The subscription rooms are placed in the centre of the town, and occupy the site of the old church: besides various smaller apartments, this edifice contains three rooms of thirty feet by twenty, two of which are occupied as school-rooms, and the other is a public reading-room or news-room, where respectable strangers are invited to peruse the London and provincial newspapers, and other publications.

Lerwick is a burgh of barony, having its municipal government vested in two bailies and nine councillors, with a separate board of police, all of whom are elected by the burghesses. A baillie court is held on every Monday, and more frequently if occasion requires, for settling small debt cases, and for taking cognizance of police offences; the sheriff-court sits every Thursday, except during the recess; and the justices of the peace, the commissioners of supply, and the provincial synod of Shetland, also hold their meetings in Lerwick. The trade of this town is much more extensive than the amount of its population would indicate: there are shops in almost all the houses on both sides of the principal street; and the mercantile business which is transacted, in some of the establishments here, would be considered important in any city in the kingdom: almost the whole produce of Shetland, consisting of salted fish, oil, butter, and hosiery, passes to market through the merchants of Lerwick; and, in like manner, by them are imported nearly all the groceries, spirits and manufactured goods used throughout the islands. There are three banking establishments in the town—the Shetland Bank, a branch of the National Bank, and a local savings' bank; it is to be regretted that the benefits arising from the latter have not yet been generally perceived or taken advantage of by the labouring classes in Shetland. The registered shipping belonging to the port of Lerwick amounts to four thousand tons. Three or four schooners, having comfortable accommodations for passengers, are steadily employed in the coasting-trade between Lerwick and Leith; a mail-packet plies constantly between the former place and Peterhead; and during the summer months the 'Sovereign,' a splendid new steamer, visits Lerwick once every fortnight, starting from Leith, and calling at Aberdeen, Wick and Kirkwall. The harbour of Lerwick (or Bressay sound, as it is frequently called,) is one of the most spacious, secure and commodious havens in the British empire: it is bounded on the east by the island of Bressay, and on the west by Mainland, having an entrance from the south, and another from the north; its extent may be inferred from the fact that, on more than one occasion, a fleet of upwards of ninety sail of war-ships has anchored in it, and found ample space for getting under weigh. The population of the town is 3,200.

SCALLOWAY, a sea-port village in the parish of Tingwall, is eight miles from Lerwick, situate on the north side of a fine bay on the west side of Mainland. Anciently this was the capital of Shetland; but in proportion as Lerwick has increased in importance, Scalloway has retrograded. Near the village stand the ruins of Scallow castle, erected in 1600 by Patrick Stewart, the tyrannical Earl of Orkney and Shetland; at the gate of the castle all public acts still continue to be proclaimed. The inhabitants chiefly subsist by the herring fishery; and for facilitating the pursuit of this branch of marine industry, Messrs. Hay & Ogilvy, of this place, have erected a large quay, and extensive warehouses, cooorage, &c. The men of Scalloway are of a very fearless character, and frequently put to sea in such boisterous and stormy weather as would deter the most experienced and intrepid seamen of other quarters: they are also a very industrious and persevering race; some of them have feud ground, and are erecting neat houses for themselves. The parish church stands three miles from the village, at the head of a fine fresh-water loch. On the west shore is a spring of very excellent water; the quantity discharged is constant and abundant, and is uninfluenced either by wet or dry seasons; it is covered by the sea at high water. Not far distant is 'Gallows Hill,' so called from its having formerly been the place of execution for criminals; the last who suffered on the spot are said to have been two unfortunate females, who fell a sacrifice to ignorance and superstition, in the seventeenth century, for the crime of witchcraft. According to a census taken in 1836 for parochial purposes, Scalloway contains about five hundred inhabitants.

PEEBLES-SHIRE,

OR TWEED-DALE, a county in the southern part of Scotland, is bounded on the north and north-east by Edinburghshire, on the east and south-east by Selkirkshire, on the south by Dumfries-shire, and on the west by the county of Lanark. In length, from its southern border, to its extreme northern apex, it measures full thirty miles; from west to east, including the parts on the latter boundary that mingle with Selkirkshire, its breadth is upwards of twenty miles, whilst in other parts it varies from ten to fifteen miles. Its form is exceedingly irregular, and the contents of its area have been variously computed. About 338 square miles, or 216,320 acres, may be taken as the nearest estimate of its superficies: according to a statement made in 1821, it appears that, of 312 square miles, there were 27,000 acres in cultivation, and of hills, mosses and moors there were 177,160 acres. The shire derives its present title from the name of the county town, and Tweedale, or Tweed-dale, from being the district in which the Tweed has its source, and the vale through which it pursues its course to the east. The Gadenii tribe of Britons, who inhabited this secluded territory on the Tweed, have left innumerable traces of their residence, demonstrated in the names of places, druidic and warlike remains, and sepulchral tumuli. The Romans were the first people who broke in upon the British aborigines in the district: after the abdication of the Roman power, the Gadenii naturally associated with the kindred Britons of Strathclyde; and the descendants of those early settlers continued here throughout the Pictish period, and until the fortune of the Scottish kings prevailed in 974. From the epoch of the migration of the Strathclyde Britons, in the ninth century, the Scots-Irish intermingled with the remaining Britons on the Upper Tweed. The next and last class of intruders on the district was the Anglo-Saxons from Lothian, who ultimately prevailed, and finally established a permanent settlement in the shire: one of the chiefs of this people, called Eadulph, settled in the vale of Edleston water, to which, with the village, he communicated his name; in this manner those of Saxon lineage founded the families of rank in Peebles-shire.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is an uninterrupted series of hill and mountain ranges, so close upon each other that there is scarcely to be found a plain of moderate dimensions in the district, and not one of any kind unless upon the margin of the Tweed or its tributaries. Notwithstanding the attempts made by several individuals to encourage new and better modes of agriculture, it is certain that till within the last fifty years the management of arable farms was in a deplorably low condition; but, within the last thirty years, particularly, draining, ploughing and planting have been carried on most effectually, and the general features of the country highly improved. The sides and summits of the hills are, at the present time, here and there clothed with exuberant plantations; and the great vale of the district, and its minor valleys, are now well cultivated, enclosed and divided: rich arable fields have taken the place of unproductive swamps, and are rapidly advancing up the sides of the hills. It appears that, twenty-five years ago, the amount of stock in the shire was—1,126 horses, 5,060 cattle, and 112,800 sheep. Little can be said of the minerals of the county. At the north-east extremity of the shire coal is found, but at too great a distance to be of advantage to the general population; the county is in the same predicament as to freestone, and the houses are nearly all built of blue whinstone. At Stobo there is a valuable quarry of blue slate; limestone and marl are plentiful, and ironstone is found in some parts of the district. Peebles-shire is singularly devoid of manufactures of almost every description: such a circumstance, which has scarcely a parallel in any other county in Scotland, is the more remarkable when it is considered what a superiority the district possesses in the purity and fall of its waters, which make it altogether a most advantageous site for the establishment of paper and spinning mills, as well as general manufactories.

RIVERS and MOUNTAINS.—The principal river is the Tweed, distinguished as the fourth of Scottish streams: the upper sources of this beautiful water are found in the parish of Tweedsmuir, in this county; it is enriched by many tributaries, and, after passing the ancient town of Berwick, falls into the German Ocean. The other rivers are the Lyne, the Leithen and the Manow, all of which are subsidiary to the Tweed—and the Leggett, which runs into St. Mary's Loch, in Selkirkshire. In the rivers and small lakes there are abundance of salmon and trout, and a lake called the 'West Water Loch' is noted for the quantity of eels with which it swarms. The ELEVATIONS, for so small a county, are very numerous, and some of them are of considerable altitude; the following are the most conspicuous in height above the level of the sea:—Hartfield, 2,916 feet; Broad-Law, 2,850; Dollar-Law, 2,840; Scrape, 2,560; Gums-Cleugh, 2,200; Dundroich, Pyketstane and Hell's-Cleugh, each 2,100; Cardon, 2,000; Cairn Hill, 1,800; Broughton Heights, 1,483, and Meigle, 1,480.

Peebles-shire comprises fourteen parishes and two parts of parishes; it contains one Royal Burgh, PEEBLES, but possesses no representative burgh. The COUNTY returns one member to parliament.

(b) Part of the parish of Peebles is also in Selkirkshire, but the whole is entered here.*

The Total annual value of Real Property in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £64,182.

INNERLEITHEN AND TRAQUAIR.

INNERLEITHEN (or Inverleithen), is a respectable village in the parish of its name, 28 miles s. of Edinburgh, 16 n. w. of Selkirk, 12 w. of Galashiels, and 6 e. of Peebles, pleasantly situate near the mouth of the Leithen, within a quarter of a mile of the left bank of the Tweed, and environed on the east and west by high and partly wooded hills. Upon the Leithen is a large woollen manufactory, the powerful machinery of which is propelled by the stream—the works employ a number of hands; but the celebrity and prosperity of the village is mainly derived from the resort of visitors to a salubrious mineral spring, possessing properties similar in effect to the waters of Harrogate. The well here has been found eminently beneficial in cases of scrofulous disorders, inflammations of the eyes, and various diseases originating in impurity of the blood. The spring is much frequented in the summer, particularly by families from Edinburgh, for whose accommodation a number of substantial houses have been built, forming a neat small street, along the public road, with a variety of houses behind, let as private furnished lodgings. A well-house was erected in 1826, containing subscription reading rooms, which are supplied with newspapers and a select library. Additional celebrity has been imparted to this place by Sir Walter Scott, in the publication of his novel called 'St. Ronan's Well,' of which this spot is supposed to be the scene. An Inn here has adopted the title of the novel. Within these few years an association has been instituted, styled the 'St. Ronan's Border Club,' which is composed of a great number of gentlemen connected with all parts of the country, under whose auspices is held an annual festival for the exhibition of olympic and border games, and gymnastic exercises. The day of competition is usually the Edinburgh fast day in May.

TRAQUAIR is a parish on the south bank of the Tweed, and watered also by the river Quair; it lies opposite to Innerleithen, with which a communication has been opened by means of a wooden bridge thrown over the Tweed. The general appearance of the parish is rocky and mountainous, Gumsclenzh and Minchmoor, lofty eminences, lying on the road to Selkirk, are both in this parish. The old mansion house of Traquair is delightfully situated on the banks of the Tweed, where that river and the Quair unite; and on the side of the hill overlooking the lawn is 'the Bush aboon Traquair,' (the subject of the celebrated ballad) pointed out by a few birch trees, the remains of a thicket or arbour, once the seat of pastoral love.

LINTON, or WEST LINTON, as it is sometimes designated, to distinguish it from East Linton in Haddingtonshire, is 16 miles s. s. w. of Edinburgh, 14 n. w. of Peebles, and 11 n. e. of Biggar, finely situate at the conflux of the Lyne and Tweed rivers; besides which the parish is watered by the North Esk. Although the greater part of this district is hilly, yet it is fertile, and famed for its excellent sheep pasturage. The village has long been celebrated for its large sheep markets in June, which are among the principal in this part of Scotland. Linton gives a baron's title to the family of Traquair.

NEWLANDS is a parish situate between Linton and Edleston, watered by the Lyne and a small tributary stream, called the Tarth. The surface is diversified with hill and dale, and the hills are mostly green without heath. Trees thrive in every part of the parish, and the greater part is enclosed by hedge rows and fences. Noble House Inn is in this parish, at which the trustees of the turnpike roads, for the western district, and the lieutenant of the county, hold their annual meetings. The parish church is situated on the left bank of the Lyne water; and at the confluence of that stream with the Tarth stand the ruins of Drochil Castle, once a large edifice partly erected by the Regent Morton, and left unfinished when he was put to death on the scaffold, by the Scottish maiden, or guillotine.

PEEBLES,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF EDLESTON, AND THE GENTRY, CLERGY, &c. IN THE PARISHES TO THE SOUTH AND WEST OF PEEBLES.

PEEBLES is an ancient royal burgh, the capital of the county and parish to which it gives name, and the seat of a presbytery; 22 miles s. of Edinburgh, the like distance w. by N. of Selkirk, 54 n.e. of Dumfries, and 47 e. by s. of Glasgow; situate in the centre of its parish, on a beautiful and large plain, having the Tweed running along its southern side, and the Peebles (or Edleston) water along its northern limit. It is surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, and its vicinage is adorned by numerous elegant mansions and plantations; amongst these, King's Meadow, Kerfield, Venlaw, Langside and Rossetta are the most conspicuous as modern seats, having been all erected within these last fifty years. Sir John Hay, Bart., of Hayston and King's Meadows, who is principal proprietor of the parish, has thrown over the Tweed, in a romantic glen about a mile below the town, an elegant wire bridge, which is much admired. The name of this town has been spelt several ways, at different periods—as Peblys, Peblys, and Peeblis—and the present orthography is of no older date than the last century. For a long period Peebles has consisted of two towns, respectively called New and Old: the former occupies the ridge of a peninsula projected westward along the northern side of the Edleston before mentioned, over which is a bridge forming a communication with the old town, which lies on the face of sloping ground. The Edleston water, by a bend round the head of the peninsula, falls into the Tweed, over which there is another bridge, of five arches, lately widened and greatly improved. The town is neat and clean, and within these few years the streets and principal shops have been lighted with gas by a joint-stock company. Of the public buildings the most conspicuous are the town-hall and gaol, the Tontine Inn, the religious edifices and the public schools. As a town profiting by manufactures or external trade, Peebles takes a station inferior to many towns of less magnitude, and not so happily favoured by situation: formerly the manufacture of woollens and serges was carried on here to some extent, and at the beginning of the present century that of fine cotton cloths was introduced; but these branches have gone to decay, and at present the town cannot boast of any staple manufacture. There are mills for grinding flour and meal, propelled by water from the Tweed; three breweries, two tanneries, and two principal inns—the 'Tontine,' before mentioned, and the 'Harrow,' both in the High-street. A branch of the British Linen Company's bank has been established here for some years, and there are several respectable fire and life agencies. It is not satisfactorily ascertained at what period Peebles was created a royal burgh: Alexander III was a munificent patron of it, and its original charter is supposed to have been bestowed by that monarch; succeeding kings recognized its right to the distinction, among whom was James VI, whose charter granted to the burghesses an extensive range of landed property and right of common in different parts, nearly the whole of which has been lost to the inhabitants. The government is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, eleven councillors, and one deacon of the weavers—the burghal corporation thus consisting of seventeen members. A sheriff's court, for the county, is held weekly, on Tuesday; the freeholders of the shire meet in April and September, and the lieutenantcy hold their annual meeting here in September. The Royal Company of Archers, or King's Body-guard for Scotland, come to Peebles from Edinburgh annually, attired in the ancient and elegant dress of the bowmen of Scotland, to shoot for the old established prize of a silver arrow, given by the burgh to the most successful marksman. There are several friendly societies, some excellent public schools and superior seminaries; for the latter this town is deservedly celebrated, with respect both to the method of instruction and the healthfulness of their situation. The places of worship are the church (a handsome building with a lofty spire), chapels for the relief and secession congregations, and a neat and elegant episcopalian chapel; the latter, which has been recently erected, is finished in a very superior style, and ornamented with a beautiful window of stained glass. The ruins of two ancient churches are still extant; one which was dedicated to St. Mary—the other built by Alexander III, in the middle of the thirteenth century, and dedicated to the Holy Cross and St. Nicholas; the same monarch erected, likewise, a house contiguous, for himself, which continued a royal residence until the accession of James VI to the throne of England. Among the objects in the town and neighbourhood which generally attract attention is Nidpath Castle, a noble ruin, looking down upon the town and the Tweed from a romantic glen, about a mile distant to the west; the building is a massive tower, and, with its interesting site and localities, is the delight of the dranghtsman. Half a mile to the east of the town, on a hill called 'Janet's Brae,' may be discerned the traces of two ancient British camps. The market of Peebles is held on Tuesday; and the fairs on the second Tuesday of January, the first Tuesday of March, the second Wednesday of May, the first Tuesday after the 18th of July, the Tuesday preceding the 24th of August, the Tuesday before the 12th September, the second Tuesday of October, and the Tuesday before 12th December. EDLESTON (or Eddlestone) is a village in the parish of its name, four miles north of Peebles, situate on both sides of the Edleston water, which takes its rise from various springs on the north and north-east boundaries, and at Cowey's Linn forms a cascade of thirty-five feet. The South Esk has also its source out of a small lake within two miles of the village. Anciently the kirk and its small hamlet stood among the hills to the east, where some vestiges of them still survive the depredations of time. The church of the present village is a modern erection. For a very long period

Edleston has been noted for a large annual fair, held on the 25th of September, for the sale of cattle and winter stock, as also for the hiring of servants.

PERTHSHIRE

IS one of the most extensive counties in Scotland, situate nearly in the centre of the kingdom, whose great northern and southern divisions it may be said in some measure to connect. It is bounded on the east by the county of Forfar; on the south-east by the counties of Kinross and Fife—from the latter county it is cut off for a considerable distance by the Firth of Tay; further on the south its boundaries are Stirlingshire and the small county of Clackmannan, which latter it embraces on two sides; on the south-west Dumbarton touches it, for a short distance; on the west it is bounded by Argyleshire, and on the north-west and north by Inverness-shire. The figure of the county is very irregular, being intruded upon by other counties in some quarters, and having many indentions and projections in other parts; but for these circumstances, its form would be nearly that of a perfect circle. From the Firth of Forth at Culross, on the extreme east, to the Forest of Athol, at the source of the Tilt, on the north, it measures sixty-eight miles; and from Meikle on the east, to Argyleshire on the west, about seventy-seven miles. The contents of the area of this county have been variously estimated: we find one authority computing its superficies at 2,588 square miles of land, and 50 of lakes; and another (perhaps the most correct), at 2,830 square miles of land, and 33 of water. About twelve or fifteen years ago, the number of acres cultivated did not exceed 600,000. The monuments of antiquity which exist in Perthshire are sufficiently numerous to afford a field of curious investigation. Lying northward of the Roman wall, this shire was the theatre of the last struggle for independence which the inhabitants of the low country of Scotland made against the arms of their skilful and then invincible oppressors: the final and most distinguished battle fought by the Britons was that against Agricola, under a leader to whom the Romans have given the name of Galgacus. One of the roads formed by the invaders, passing along the district of Strathearn towards Perth, may still be traced, and also from Perth along Strathmore to the extremity of the county; the remains of several encampments, likewise, are at this day observable, particularly one at Ardoch, in the parish of Muthil, the largest and most conspicuous in Scotland. This shire also possesses antiquarian remains of a later age and history, in ruined towers and religious structures, the district having once been the residence of a number of powerful chiefs, and of a large body of churchmen. Before the reformation, and during the domination of episcopacy, Perthshire formed the ample diocese of a bishop whose seat was at Dunkeld, as well as another bishopric at Dunblane.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—Perthshire may be considered the Yorkshire of Scotland: like that immense county, it is subdivided into districts, which, previous to the jurisdictions established in 1748, were stewardries under the power of different great landed proprietors; the names of these various districts (or feudalities) are Monteith, Gowrie, Perth Proper, Strathearn, Stormont, Breadalbane, Rannoch, Balquhider, and Athol. Little attention, however, is now paid to these divisions, and the county is arranged more naturally under the two extensive denominations of Highland and Lowland, the range of Grampians forming the line of demarcation. Eighteen parishes belong to the Highland portion, while that of the Lowland comprises fifty-eight. The soil of Perthshire comprehends all the varieties known in Scotland—the coarse and loamy being prevalent on the banks of the rivers, and the sandy and tillable classes on the sides of the hills; in many places are extensive mosses, particularly in Monteith district. In former times the greater part of Perthshire, like the adjacent county of Fife, was covered with woods, which the progress of agriculture has in many districts removed; still, however, besides the detached woods throughout the shire, there are extensive forests in Breadalbane and in Monteith. Within the last seventy years there has been a great deal of planting in Perthshire, greatly to the amelioration of the climate and the advantage of the agriculturist: of the different noblemen and gentlemen who have devoted their attention to this important branch of improvement, none have rendered themselves so conspicuous as the Duke of Athol; his Grace has likewise exerted himself most beneficially in the improvement of the roads of the county, which have latterly been brought into excellent condition. During the progress of the last sixty years, a prodigious and most gratifying change has been effected in the agriculture of Perthshire, the lower parts of which now vie in rural cultivation, wealth and beauty, with any district in Scotland; the upper portion of the country is still devoted to the pasturage of sheep and cattle, which are mostly driven southward for sale and consumption. The agricultural character of the county has in more recent times been enhanced by the active and spirited exertions of various local associations. The subject of the MINERALOGY of Perthshire affords sufficient materials to excite and to reward the curiosity and research of the scientific student of the works of nature; but, in a commercial or economical point of view, its minerals are of no great importance. At Culross, upon the Forth, coal has been wrought for ages; but, from its situation, it is of little advantage to this county. Limestone rocks are found in a variety of localities, both in the high and the low country; but the use of lime is greatly impeded from the want of proper fuel for burning it—peat, which is the fuel of all the inland districts, being a weak and ineffectual agent in the process of calcination. Marble, of a superior quality, is worked on the property of the Duke of Athol near Glentilt; beds of fire-clay have been discovered near Culross; and in that neighbourhood, on the Devon, there is abundance of ironstone. About Callander that species of rock called breccia, or, more familiarly, ‘plum-pudding stone,’ is not uncommon; and here also, as in other parts, are various kinds of slate. A chain of sandstone runs from Gartree to the vicinity of Crieff; upon the Tay is one of the most celebrated stone-quarries in this country; the principal stone of which the Grampians consist is granite. Perthshire abounds with game of nearly every description, though the large species is now considerably diminished in numbers: the red deer, or stag, may be said to inhabit the forests and mountain glades in the most perfect state of nature and wildness; it is cautious in the extreme, and singularly jealous of the human form, eluding with wonderful effect the wiles of the sportsman. A variety of other game are also inhabitants of these wilds; among the rest, the roe, a much more familiar animal than the stag—appearing, even in summer, in the woodlands and plantations of the valleys, down to the habitable places. In regard to its natural features, Perth is esteemed a county of first-rate interest. From its inland situation, it of course does not comprise any combination of marine and mountain scenery, which form the great attraction of the West Highlands; yet, as it abounds in inland lakes, and possesses rising grounds of as grand a character as that district, it is in no respect inferior as the object of ‘a tour in search of the picturesque and beautiful,’ while its splendid plains may be said to form an additional attraction. MANUFACTURES.—The principal pursuit of industry, in the towns and villages of Perthshire, is the weaving of linen goods, chiefly of coarse fabric; in connexion with this branch of manufacture, flax spinning mills and a considerable number of bleach-fields are established. The manufactures of the county are not, however, wholly confined to that of linen: ginghams and pullicates are produced at Perth, and cotton spinning works are in constant operation at Stanley (in Auchtergaven) and Doune; the woollen manufacture is carried on, to a limited extent, in two or three places in the shire; and considerable distilleries and breweries are found in several towns and villages.

RIVERS, LAKES and MOUNTAINS.—Like all elevated countries, Perthshire abounds with extensive lakes and rivers, which occupy valleys lying between lofty mountains. The chief running waters are the TAY, the EARN, the GARRY, the BRAN, the ALMOND, the TEATH, the ALLAN, the DOCHART, the TUMMELL, the BRUAR, the ERICHT, the ARDLE, the SHEE, and the ISLA—besides innumerable third and fourth rate rivers, and streamlets of all sizes. The Forth, from rising in Stirlingshire, is not considered a Perthshire river, though it flows along a large portion of its south-west quarter. The chief LAKES of the county are Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, Loch Ard, Loch Voil, Loch Lubnaig, Loch Dochart, and Loch Earn—those are in the south-west part of the shire; Loch Tay, in the centre of the mountainous district; and Loch Rannoch, Loch Ericht, and Loch Lydoch (the two latter in part only), in the north-west quarter: in the lower divisions there are some smaller and less important lakes. The most remarkable mineral waters as yet discovered in this county are those of Pitcaithly, near the bridge of Earn, which have been long famed for their efficacy in curing scrofula, and likewise complaints of the stomach. The MOUNTAINS of greatest altitude above the level of the sea, in Perthshire, are—Ben Lawers, 4,015; Ben More, 3,903; Ben Gloa, 3,724; Schialion, 3,564; Ben Derig, 3,550; Ben-Ardlanach, 3,500; Ben Ledi, 3,009; Ben Venue, 3,000; Ben Chonzie, 2,922; Farragon, 2,584; Ben Achally, 1,800; Birnam Hill (mentioned in Shakspeare’s play of ‘Macbeth’), 1,580; Turleum, 1,400; Blair, 1,300; King’s Seat, 1,196; Lochtown Hill, 1,172; Kinpurnie, 1,151; Beingloe, 1,040; Dunsinane (whereon was a strong hold of Macbeth, twelve miles from Birnam Hill), 1,024; Kinnoul, 700; and Barry, 688.

Perthshire comprehends seventy-two entire parishes and twelve parts of parishes. The county is divided into ten districts, each under the jurisdiction of a justice of peace court and of a body of deputy-lieutenants; it is further divided into two sheriff-substituties—the seat of the one being Perth, the other Dunblane. The shire contains only two Royal Burghs, PERTH and CULROSS: the former returns a member to parliament, and the latter is a contributory burgh, joining with Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dunfermline, in sending another. The SHIRE, like other Scottish counties, likewise has one representative in the senate.

IS a manufacturing village in the parish of its name, which is mostly in this county, and extends into that of Forfar, 62 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 N. of Perth, 15 N. by W. of Dundee, 12 W. of Forfar, 5 from Blairgowrie, and 3 from Meigle, pleasantly situate at the foot of a hill. The manufacture of brown linens is carried on here to a considerable extent, and there is a flax spinning mill. It was erected into a burgh of barony by James III: the baron baillie holds a court monthly. The parish is divided into two considerable districts, by the hills of Alyth Loyal and Barry. Mount Blair, a conspicuous point of land, rises about twelve hundred feet above the level of the sea. The parish is watered by the river Isla, and several smaller streams. The southern district, lying in the strath, is about four miles long and three broad, this, as well as the tract of land towards the hills, is fertile and verdant. Besides the established church, there are an episcopalian chapel, and two seceders' meeting houses, the one united, the other original. A market is held on Tuesday; and fairs on Fasten's eve, the first Tuesday after the second Thursday in March, the second Tuesday in, and on the 25th of June, the last Tuesday in July, the first Tuesday and Wednesday in, and on the 11th of November, and the second Tuesday in December, all old style.

BLAIRGOWRIE AND CLUNIE,

WITH THE GENTRY, CLERGY, &c. OF THE PARISHES OF BENDOCY, KINCLAVEN, AND KINLOCH.

BLAIRGOWRIE is a thriving village in the parish of the same name, 12 miles E. of Dunkeld, 6 w. of Alyth, and 5 N. of Cupar Angus; pleasantly situate on the southern slope of the range of hills which bound the valley of Strathmore on the north, and at the mouth of the pass through which the great north road to Fort George (by the Spittal of Gleneshe and the Castletown of Braemar) runs; the river Erich passes close to the town, and propels the machinery of numerous spinning mills in the neighbourhood. Blairgowrie was created a burgh of barony in the year 1634, by a charter from Charles I., and is now governed by a baron-bailie and four councillors. A justice of peace court is held on the second Monday of every month, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5; and a baron-bailie court every Wednesday, for sums under £2. A town-house and gaol were lately built by subscription. There are a monthly deposit society, a masonic lodge, and a weavers' society in the place, and also a society for cultivating the ancient and national game of 'curling'; there are also two subscription libraries and a reading room. The spinning of flax, and the manufacture of linens, prevail in this village rather extensively. A new church was erected in 1824, which cost upwards of £1,300; but, although at that time calculated to afford accommodation to the whole population of the town and parish, it is now, owing to the surprising increase in numbers since its erection, much too small.

Blairgowrie parish is of an irregular form, about eleven miles in length and three in breadth. It is divided into two districts by the Grampians, which rise immediately north of the village; the lower district is highly cultivated and fertile, while the upper is comparatively barren and moorish; with the exception of the banks of the river, which are good alluvial soil. The scenery in the neighbourhood of the town is very beautiful; and in the adjoining parish, about Craighall (the seat of Robert Clerk Ratray, Esq.), it is of the most romantic character, and is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland; the proprietor kindly permits strangers visiting the place to walk through the entire grounds. To lovers of the 'gentle art' of angling, no locality could be more suitable for enjoying this healthful and delightful amusement—there being not only excellent trout and salmon fishing in the Erich and the Tay, the Isla and the burn of Lornly (which are all within a moderate distance of the village), but likewise capital perch and pike fishing in the several lochs in the neighbourhood; there are no less than six of these beautiful lakes not more than four miles from Blairgowrie, all abounding with the two latter species of fish. On account of the inviting attractions of the situation, the acknowledged salubrity of the air, and the numerous lovely walks in the environs, the village is much frequented in summer by families from more crowded places, who are happy to exchange the confined atmosphere, which they usually inhale, for the fresh invigorating breezes and rural perambulations of the country. Amongst the antiquities in the vicinity, the remains of the castle of Glaculue must be noticed; they present a strikingly picturesque ruin, situated on the precipitous bank of a narrow wooded glen, about two miles from the village. Within the parish are still visible a druidical circle and some 'cairns.' Fairs are held at Blairgowrie on the third Wednesday of March, on the 26th of May (if it falls on Wednesday—if not, on the first Wednesday after), the 23d of July, the first Wednesday of November, the 22d of November (or the first Tuesday after), and the Wednesday before Falkirk tryst; a market for cattle and grain is also held every fortnight during the winter months, on Wednesdays, which is well attended.

CLUNIE parish lies about five miles west of Blairgowrie; it includes part of the lower range of the Grampians, which are barren and covered with heather. The scenery, however, on the whole, is romantic and pleasing, presenting abundance of wood and water. The loch of Clunie is one of the most beautiful small sheets of water in the county; within it is a little island (thought to be artificial), on which stands an ancient tower, the property of the Airly family, which is supposed to have been the birth-place of the 'Admirable Crichton,' whose father, Sir Robert Crichton, lord advocate of Scotland, was then proprietor of the barony of Clunie; the tower is still in good repair, and partly furnished though now never occupied, but it is open to strangers desirous of visiting it. On the northern side of the lake is situate the charming property of Forneith House, lately belonging to the Very Rev. Principal Baird, and now to John Binny, Esq.

CALLANDER,

ABERFOYLE, BALQUHIDDER, AND LOCH EARN-HEAD.

CALLANDER is a thriving, modern and neat village, 8 n. w. of Doune, and 6 n. of Thornhill; situate in a beautiful valley, on both sides of the Teith, which river is here crossed by the bridge of three arches. The houses are disposed in regular plan, and are covered with blue slates. The church, a modern erection, with a spire, is a handsome building, and an ornament to the village. The scenery around Callander is uncommonly beautiful: immediately above the village there is a peculiarly lovely spot, formed by the junction of two little rivers, issuing respectively from Loch Lubnaig and Loch Vennacher, which when united form the Teith. Callander may be reckoned the threshold of the Highlands in this quarter. A mile west of the village is the pass of Leny, which affords access to a splendid range of mountain prospect; the bridge of Brucklin is another fine point in the scenery directly surrounding Callander; the ride to Loch Katrine and the Trosachs (classic scenes), about ten miles from the village, is extremely delightful. The parish extends from the banks of the Teith to the Grampians; it is sixteen miles in length, by a breadth of ten. The low grounds are arable and fertile, but the upper country is wild and heathy. Callander has four annual fairs, namely, the 21st of March, 16th of May (o. s.), first Thursday of December (o. s.), and the third Tuesday of July.

ABERFOYLE, a parish (and the name of a celebrated pass or loy valley between the Highlands and Lowlands), is remarkable for its picturesque scenery, its fine lakes and numerous streams, and the marked direction taken by the Grampians through the lower part of it; as well as for producing a great quantity of rare plants, suited to reward the researches of the botanist. The village or 'clachan' of Aberfoyle is the scene of some fictions in the novel of 'Rob Roy.' At the head of the valley or pass lies Loch Ard, a bright and placid basin, embedded in surrounding woods, over which rises the gracefully towering form of Ben Lomond, one of whose summit platforms ascends upwards of three thousand feet above the level of the sea. The best view of this noble eminence is obtained from a wooded promontory which juts out into the water (scarcely leaving room for the road that passes on to the westward), and which, it is said, was the spot on which the skirmish occurred, described in the above novel, where Helen Macgregor makes her first appearance. Two fairs are held annually in the parish, namely, on the first Friday of August and third Thursday of October.

BALQUHIDDER is a Highland parish, lying in the western extremity of the county, among the Grampians. The village lies at the east end of Loch Voil, at the distance of thirteen miles from Callander; and is remarkable as the last residence of the famous Rob Roy, whose grave is pointed out in the church-yard. The parish is altogether mountainous and pastoral, and, from the number of acclivities composing its sides, has obtained the popular appellation of the 'Braes of Balquhiddier,' by which it is celebrated in Scottish song and legend. It comprises several lofty mountains, among which Ben More rises superiorly majestic, and possesses many beautiful lakes, including Loch Doine, Loch Voil, part of Loch Lubnaig, and part of Loch Earn, with several others of minor celebrity. A considerable portion of the ancient Caledonian forest extends into this district. LOCH EARN-HEAD is a small hamlet in the parish of Balquhiddier, deriving its name from its situation at the head of Loch Earn, a delightful elongated sheet of water, about seven miles in length by one in breadth; it is much frequented by parties in the angling season, and supplies capital sport.

COMRIE, ST. FILLANS AND MONIVARD.

COMRIE is a respectable and populous village in the parish of its name, 58 miles n. w. of Edinburgh, 24 w. of Perth, and 6½ w. of Crieff; situate in a beautiful and romantic valley at the foot of the Grampians, and on the north bank of the Earn, at the junction of the Lednock. Loch Earn lies at the western extremity of the parish, and from it flows the beautiful Earn, along which there is a public road through the valley of Strathearn. In the village the manufacture of woollens is carried on to a limited extent, and there is a distillery. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and a meeting-house for an united secession congregation: the former is a modern and handsome structure, with a fine spire. The neighbourhood possesses some interesting and attractive objects; the most remarkable are vestiges of Roman encampments on the plain of Dalginross, several druidical circles, and a monument erected to the memory of the late Lord Melville. Five annual fairs are held here, viz. St. Kenach's on the 22nd of March, the first Tuesday of May, 11th of July, 8th of November, and 4th of December.

St. FILLANS is a small hamlet in the parish of Killin, 5½ miles from Comrie, pleasantly situate at the foot of Loch Earn, where a boat is kept for the accommodation of fishing parties or other visitors, who are attracted hither by the delightful scenery of this district. In the month of August, annually, this village is the scene of an interesting festival, instituted, in 1819, by a society called the St. Fillans Society, for the purpose of awarding prizes to successful competitors in certain national games; there is also a prize bestowed upon the best dressed Highlander, and another upon the most approved vocal performer in Gaelic. The society partakes also of a benevolent character, as it imparts aid to indigent and distressed members, widows and orphans. Great numbers of persons of respectable rank, from all parts of the Highlands, attend the meetings of this interesting association. A small neat church has recently been erected here; and there is an excellently conducted inn.

MONIVARD parish includes the abrogated parish of Strouan; thus united it is bounded on the north by Comrie and Monzie, by the former also on the west, by Muthill on the south, and by Crieff on the east. The river Earn passes through the district from west to east; and in the neighbourhood of this stream the country is beautiful, well planted, and enclosed. There are several small lakes in the parish, among which Monivard lake, situate at the bottom of a fine wood, and well stored with pike, perch, and eels, is a delightful object to passengers, and a great ornament to the pleasure grounds of Auchtertyre. On the banks of the lake a fine repeating echo is produced. There are some other seats of great beauty and taste, among which 'Lawers' is the most distinguished.

CRIEFF, MONZIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CRIEFF is a market town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 22 miles N. of Stirling, 18 W. of Perth, and 6½ E. of Comrie; situate in one of the most delightful districts of Scotland, on the southern declivity of a hill near the Grampians, having the Earn and several other streams at the bottom; it occupies the mouth of an important pass into the Highlands of Perthshire, with a wild mountainous region on the one side and rich soft vales on the other. Crieff is a thriving and increasing town—deriving no small advantage from the resort, in the summer months, of invalids and others, who are attracted by the beauty of the scenery and the salubrity of its situation. It is a seat of the linen trade, engaged in which are many resident agents; there are also in the town and neighbourhood several distilleries, two breweries, and the like number of dye-works and tanneries. The town contains a gaol, surmounted by a spire with a clock; two news-rooms, a large and elegant assembly-room, and a handsome building for the use of a masonic lodge. The government of the place is vested in two baron bailies—the one appointed by Lord Willoughby de Eresby, the other by Anthony Murray, Esq. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month (except one month in the autumn), for the recovery of small debts. The places of worship are the parish church (a modern erection), a Roman catholic chapel, a meeting-house for a relief congregation, and another for members of the united secession. The market, which is held on Thursday, is generally well attended. Crieff has nine annual fairs, namely, the first Thursday of January, the third Thursday of February, the second Thursday of March, the first Thursday of April, the first and last Thursdays of June, the second Thursday of July, third Thursday in August, and the Thursday immediately preceding Falkirk October tryst.

The parish of MONZIE, which is bounded on the south by Crieff, lies on the south side of the Grampians; it is a mountainous district, not above one-third part being arable—the remainder heath and moss; it is watered by the Amond, the Keltie and the Shagie, upon which are several romantic cascades. The only inhabited portions of the district are two valleys, separated from each other by a ridge of hills four miles broad. The church is a modern building; near it, on the banks of a rivulet, is the parochial school.

DOUNE, DEANSTON, LOGIE, LECROPT,

AND BRIDGE OF ALLAN.

DOUNE is a respectable and thriving village, in the parish of Kilmadock and district of Monteith, 44 miles w.n.w. of Edinburgh, 35 s.w. of Perth, 19 s. of Crieff, 9 n.w. of Stirling, 8 s.e. of Callander, 5 n. of Thornhill, and 4 w. of Dunblane, occupying a pleasant situation on the north bank of the Teith, and consists of three streets, radiating from a centre, where the market cross stands. Doune was formerly noted for its manufacture of Highland pistols, which branch has long become extinct. The cotton manufacture is extensively carried on, at Deanson works, by Messrs. Finlay and Co., of Glasgow, who have also established a large iron-foundry. A justice of peace court sits twice annually in the village, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. In 1826 a new parish church was erected; its style is Gothic, with a handsome tower; the interior is ornamented with a beautiful pulpit, particularly worthy of notice: for this public work the parishioners are indebted to the Earl of Moray, the patron and chief heritor of the parish, and owner of Doune Castle, once the family seat of the Earls of Monteith. The ruins of this once noble castle stand in the immediate neighbourhood, upon an elevated peninsula formed by the junction of the Ardoch water with the Teith: to judge from the massiveness and extent of its remains, Doune Castle appears to have belonged to that first-rate order of Scottish fortresses of which those of Edinburgh, Stirling and Dumbarton afford entire specimens; there still remains one huge square building, the walls of which are about forty feet high and ten feet thick, together with a tower which rises above the rest to the height of eighty feet, ascending proudly over the lofty trees that encompass the place, and overlooking a country eminent in beauty and fertility to whatever direction the eye may be turned. The fine old bridge which crosses the Teith a little above the castle was erected by Robert Spittal, a native of Stirling, who had amassed a fortune by being tailor to Margaret of England, widow of James IV: this princess was frequently an inhabitant of Doune Castle, and the unfortunate

Mary Queen of Scots is also said to have resided some time in it. The parish of Kilmadock comprises a district of great fertility; the land upon the banks of the Forth and Teith produce abundant crops of every species of grain: from the level margin of the former river the ground rises gradually to the Grampian mountains, which forms the northern boundary of the parish; the face of the country here is delightful, with many romantic features. A short distance from Doune is the small village of DEANSTON, where a friendly society was established in 1795. There are six annual fairs held at Doune; they take place on the 26th January, the second Wednesday of May, the 26th July, the first Wednesday of November, the 26th of the same month, and the 26th of December.

LOGIE is a parish lying on the Forth, at a part where the counties of Perth, Stirling and Clackmannan meet, and amongst which Logie is almost equally divided. The village, with its neat kirk, is situate about seven miles from Doune, at the base of the Ochil hills and entrance of Glendavon; and presents an uncommonly pleasing picture of natural beauty. Within the parish, about a mile from Stirling, on a flat peninsula formed by a sinuosity of the Forth, stands the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth abbey, founded in the year 1147 by David I, and in former ages a pile of great celebrity.

The parish of LECROPT lies partly in the county of Perth and partly in that of Stirling, five miles and a half from Doune, at the confluence of the Teith and the Allan. The country all around is truly beautiful; the prospects from the heights in this parish, looking down the vale of Stirling and over the delightful windings of the Forth, are particularly admired. At the bridge over the Allan, connecting the parishes of Lecropt and Logie, stands the pretty little village called BRIDGE OF ALLAN. A mill for the manufacture of paper is in operation here; and there are a number of neat little villas for the temporary accommodation of visitors, who resort to it in summer on account of the mineral well at Airthrie, in the neighbourhood.

DUNBARNY (or Dumbarny) parish is situate in the south-eastern part of the county, occupying a rich portion of Strathearn district. The church of Dunbarny is close by the village of the BRIDGE OF EARN, which latter is three miles and a half from Perth. Since this village has become populous and extensive, it has assumed the character of the capital of the district, while the name of the parish has sunk into comparative insignificance. Pitcaithley springs, near the Bridge of Earn, has been long celebrated for affording relief to those afflicted with the gravel, scurvy, &c. :

the wells are at this period in the occupation of Mr. A. Cameron, who also conducts one of the most commodious and well-regulated inns in Scotland, finely situate upon the banks of the river Earn (over which is a handsome bridge), surrounded with beautiful and romantic scenery. This establishment, which affords every accommodation to visitors, comprises hot and cold baths, two large public and a number of private sitting rooms; and the house can make up fifty beds. The great north road passes through the district towards Perth.

DUNBLANE,

OR DUMBLANE, is a market town, in the parish of its name and district of Strathallan, 41 miles n.w. of Edinburgh, 28 s.w. of Perth, 16 s. of Crieff, 14 from Auchterarder, 6 from Logie, and 3 from Doune; beautifully situate on the banks of the river Allan, which runs through the town and parish, and abounds with excellent trout. It is much resorted to in the summer season as a watering place, there being an excellent mineral spring on the property of the Earl of Kinnoull, in the vicinity of the town, where several beautiful villas are in course of erection. Dunblane was formerly the see of a bishop, founded by David I; and the great object of attraction in the present day is what was once the cathedral, the choir of which is now the parish church, all the other parts of the edifice being in a state of decay. It is situate on an eminence on the eastern bank of the Allan, overlooking the town, and is a large Gothic structure, with a steeple, of modern erection, one hundred and twenty-eight feet in height. That part of the town which adjoins the church, from its being composed chiefly of old dignified looking houses, exhibits the appearance of what is termed the Close, or the precinct of a cathedral. Dunblane is a town of limited trade, and not conspicuous as one of manufactures, although there are many excellent falls of water on the river. In the neighbourhood there is an establishment where some woollen cloth is made, and a little weaving is carried on; and in the High-street is a superior commercial and posting inn, called the "Hotel," and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland. This place is the residence of a sheriff substitute, and other functionaries. A sheriff's court, for the recovery of small debts, and for ordinary business, is held every Wednesday, and justice of peace courts occasionally.

The places of worship are, the parish church (before noticed), and two burghers' meeting houses. Besides the parochial school, which is well regulated, there is a private academy for young gentlemen, ably conducted by the Rev. A. Henderson, one of the dissenting clergymen. The country to the south of the town is very beautiful, and is finely ornamented with plantations—the ride from Dunblane to Stirling is much and justly admired. The vale of Strathallan, through which flows the river Allan, lies to the north and east of the town. The fields on the banks of the river are fertile, but as the grounds approach the hills they are of a moorish character, although excellently adapted for pastoral purposes; and the dairy produce of this district is in high repute. At the lower end of the town is the romantic walk of Kippencross, near the further extremity of which there is a plane-tree, supposed to be the largest in Scotland, the trunk being twenty-eight feet in circumference, and covering nearly half an acre with its noble-spreading branches. A few miles from the town is Sheriffmuir, on which a severe conflict took place in November, 1715, between the royal forces, under the Duke of Argyle, and the rebel army, commanded by the Earl of Marr. Prince Charles arrived at Dunblane on the 11th of September, 1745, on his way to the low country, and remained a night in the house of the laird of Balhaldie, now the property of Mr. Bain, writer. The room in which the prince held his levee, on the morning of his departure, is courteously shewn to the enquiring visitor. Dunblane bestows the title of viscount on the Duke of Leeds. The market is held on Wednesday; and the fairs on the first Wednesday in March, the first Tuesdays in May and November, and the 10th of August, all old style except that in May, and chiefly for cattle.

DUNKELD AND LITTLE DUNKELD.

DUNKELD is a small but highly interesting and handsome town, and burgh of barony, in the united parish of Dunkeld and Dowally; 57 miles n. n. w. of Edinburgh, 24 e. of Kenmore, 15 n. n. w. of Perth, and 12 w. of Blairgowrie; delightfully situate in the bosom of an amphitheatre of hills, at the spot where the highlands and lowlands appear to meet, and where the Tay first escapes from its mountain fastnesses to the smiling land to which it contributes so much additional fertility and beauty. The town is of great antiquity, and was the capital of ancient Caledonia. The monastery of the Culdees is noticed so early as 720; David I, in 1127, converted it into a bishopric. The first bishop of this see whose name appears prominently in history is the heroic William Sinclair, who assumed the mitre in 1312; he built the choir, which is still entire and converted into the parish church (which a few years ago was very elegantly fitted up); the other parts of the cathedral have been abandoned to the operations of time and the seasons, and have sunk into a state of dilapidation: in the early part of the sixteenth century the see of Dunkeld was honoured by no less distinguished an occupant than the learned Gawin Douglas, a younger son of the Earl of Angus. The situation of the cathedral, in the midst of a fine grove on the left bank of the Tay, sequestered from the gaze of the town, most highly interest the contemplative stranger; indeed the scenery which surrounds Dunkeld has long been the subject of admiration. Nature has been bountiful to this district, and her favours were duly appreciated and skillfully assisted by the late noble proprietor, the Duke of Athol, who conducted his operations and embellishments with such consummate taste as to produce one of the most beautiful and picturesque retreats that is to be found in all Scotland, and which has long been the resort as it has been the delight of all tourists and visitors—accommodations for whom, and families, are furnished by three very extensive and superior hotels, respectively called the Birnam Hotel, the Duke's Arms Hotel, and the Royal Hotel: the latter, in the occupation of Mr. Fisher, has lately undergone a thorough repair, and received considerable additions and improvements; it comprises forty bed-rooms and several elegant sitting-rooms, besides appropriate servants' apartments. The bridge of Tay, at this place, is a magnificent structure of seven arches; its erection was commenced in 1805, and completed in 1809, at a cost of upwards of £30,000., £5,000. of which was contributed by government, and the remainder disbursed by the late public-spirited nobleman: the bridge was constructed chiefly on dry land, and the river afterwards turned to flow through its finely-formed arches; a Mr. Brown was the architect. Near the town is a seat of the noble family, the gardens belonging to which, the cascades, the extensive pleasure-grounds, and grand and lovely scenery, are most attractive objects; among these, Ossian's Hall, the rumbling bridge, and several falls of the river Bran, are pointed out to the visitor.

The manufacture of linen goods was at one time the staple of Dunkeld; but that branch has materially declined, and there is little business now transacted in it. Leather-tanning is carried on rather extensively; there is also a distillery in operation; and productive slate-quarries are worked by a Mr. Harris, and by Messrs. Robertson and Jack. There are branches of the three following respectable banking establishments settled here, namely, the Central Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and the Perth Bank. Dunkeld is a burgh of barony, and, as such, governed by a baron-bailie, who is appointed by the Athol family. Besides the church, there is a meeting-house for independents; and for the education of youth there is an establishment called the Royal Grammar and Parochial School. Five fairs are held annually, viz., on the 14th February, 5th April, and 20th June (n.s.)—should any of these fall on Saturday, Sunday or Monday, the fair is postponed until the following Tuesday; the others are held on the second Tuesday and Wednesday of November (n.s.), and the 8th and 31st of December (o.s.)—either of the latter two happening on a Sunday, the previous Saturday is adopted.

LITTLE DUNKELD is (contrary to its first appellation) an extensive parish, lying on the west or right bank of the Tay, opposite to Dunkeld above described. The village is situate at the south end of the bridge, which carries the road across to Dunkeld. The parish forms a kind of irregular triangle, and is disposed by nature into three districts:—1st. The district of Murthly, extending from Kinclaven to the village of Inver: the surface of this district is beautifully varied, its soil fertile, and generally well enclosed and cultivated; it is adorned by Murthly House, the seat of the Stewards of Grandtully, and by Birnam Hill, rendered classical by Shakspeare, and rising in rude magnificence from the edge of the river. The second district extends from Inver, along the banks of the Tay, to Grandtully, a space of ten miles: here the fields are level, and the whole has the appearance of an almost continued series of beautiful gardens. The third division, which is separated from the second by a hilly tract of considerable elevation, is a valley of about nine miles in length: the soil is generally of a fertile clay or loam, grey freestone, and slate. The mineral productions that have been hitherto discovered in the parish are confined to lead ore and argillaceous earth. Little Dunkeld parish is traversed by the military road from Perth to Inverness.

DUNNING AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DUNNING is a neat village, in an extensive parish of its name, 9 miles s. w. of Perth, and 5 E. of Auchterarder; situate near the centre of the district, on the banks of the Dunning water (a tributary of the Earn), half a mile north of the base of the Ochil range of hills, and about two miles from the river Earn. It is in general well built, contains a number of good houses, and is much neater in appearance than places of its size; indeed, so regular, pretty, and clean a country village is rarely to be seen. It is under the government of a baron baillie, and is the seat of a justice of peace court. The places of worship are the parish kirk, and a burghers' meeting-house; the steeple of the former is the only object of antiquity belonging to the village; it is of ancient date, and supposed to be of Pictish origin. In the year 1715 the village was burnt to the ground by the Earl of Marr's army, on the retreat from Sheriffmuir to Perth. A thorn that was planted at that time, in the centre of the ruins, is still to be seen, and from its shape, size, and appearance, it at once attracts the stranger's attention. It is recorded by tradition, that at the conflagration of the village, only one house escaped, and that by an ingenious device on the part of its owner—a female, who, while the rest of the cottages were in flames, threw parcels of wet straw on the fire within the house, which raised such a smoke round this particular dwelling, that believing it to be in a fair way of demolition, the soldiers did not molest it. In the village are some friendly societies, including a lodge of freemasons. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday of May, old style, the 20th of June, and 24th of October.

WITH THE GENTRY AND CLERGY OF ABERNYTE, FOULIS EASTER, INCHTURE, KINNAIRD, LONGFORGAN, AND ST. MADOES.

ERROL, a parish in the Carse of Gowrie, five miles and a half in length and nearly three in breadth, stretching across the Carse from the foot of the hill to the banks of the Tay. The soil is rich and fertile, and under the most productive tillage; it is also highly favourable to the growth of fruit trees. The country is intersected with small tracts of water called pows, collected chiefly from the trenches opened for draining the grounds. As the tide and current in the Tay were making great encroachments, the proprietors of the land found it necessary to build strong walls to arrest their usurpation. It is recorded that this district received its name from Errol, signifying the flight of a hawk, from the circumstance of the family of Hay, who, having fought gallantly under Luncartney, received for their services, from the king, a gift of as much land in the Carse of Gowrie as a hawk flew over. This account, be it correct or merely originating in traditionary legend—it is certain the noble family of Hay takes the title of Earl of Errol from the appellation of the parish; the small village named after it, is ten miles east of Perth, occupying a beautiful situation on a rising ground, embowered in trees, commanding a prospect of the Tay and the Carse almost as far east as Dundee. A rivulet flows past it to the Tay, and forms a small harbour at its mouth.

IS a small village, in the parish of its name and district of Breadalbane, 84 miles N.W. of Edinburgh, 42 N.W. of Perth, 15½ N.E. of Killin, 5½ S.W. of Dull, and 5 W. of Kenmore, situate on the left bank of the river Lyon, about three miles from its junction with the Tay. The parish lies in the midst of the Grampians, and is only useful for sheep pasture. Including the abolished parish of Kilchonan, it extends thirty-seven miles in length by seventeen in breadth, occupying a large tract of Highland territory in the north-west part of the county. The district abounds in lakes, rivers, and woods; the chief of the former being Loch Rannoch, about eleven miles in length, whose banks are finely wooded. Not far from the southern bank of the lake are the barracks, called Georgetown. In this district rises the Schehallion, one of the highest mountains in Scotland, where Dr. Maskelyne, astronomer royal, some years ago, made his observations on the powers of attraction. This parish is so wild and mountainous that, prior to the year 1745, the civil power could not reach it. It was the receptacle of the freebooters, who laid the country under that species of contribution so well known by the name of 'Blackmail.' The inhabitants are now a steady industrious sort of people. Three fairs are held annually, namely, on the 25th of April, the 21st of August, and the 6th of December.

KENMORE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of KENMORE lies in the Highland district of Breadalbane, surrounding the large and beautiful lake, Loch Tay, which is twenty-one miles in length, varying from one to two in breadth. The waters of the lake seldom or never freeze: it abounds with salmon and other fish. The clean little village of Kenmore, with its kirk, its inn (a very comfortable one, called the 'Breadalbane Arms'), and its white cottages, occupy a lovely eminence at the north-east end of the loch, close by the point where it opens into a river, over which is thrown a hand-some bridge. The village is eighty miles N.W. of Edinburgh, 40 N.W. of Perth, 24 W. of Dunkeld, 16 N.E. of Killin, and 5 E. of Fortingal. In the vale below the village are the park and castle of Taymouth, the magnificent seat of the Earl of Breadalbane. The mansion contains a fine and valuable collection of portraits, by celebrated artists, and a choice selection of miscellaneous paintings, rendering the 'Breadalbane Gallery' one of the best in Scotland. The house, within these few years, has been much enlarged and improved by its noble owner, and it now ranks amongst the most splendid modern castellated mansions in Scotland. This spot is a favourite point in a tour to the Highlands, and hence is much visited in summer. The district comprises objects both sublime and beautiful: among the former is the majestic mountain, Ben Lawers, which rises, on the north-east side of the loch, to the height of 4,015 feet. There are six annual fairs, namely, on the first Tuesday in March and the 2nd of November, both old style, the 28th of June, the 26th of July, the 17th of September, and the 24th of December.

KILLIN

IS a village in a mountainous parish of the same name, and of great extent, 74 miles N.W. of Edinburgh, 40 N.W. of Stirling, 27 W. by N. of Crieff, 22½ N. of Callander, 16 S.W. of Kenmore; and 8 from Loch Earn Head, occupying a delightful and picturesque situation at the west end of the celebrated Loch Tay, and near the confluence of the rivers Lochy and Dochart, with the waters of the lake. On a small island, formed by two branches of the river, and much in the shape of a coffin, is the burial place of the M'Nab clan. On one of the trees of the island may be seen a branch, which, severed from its parent stem by a storm in February, 1806, attached itself to a neighbouring tree, and is now growing with its branches downwards. A small eminence, in the neighbourhood of Killin, is pointed out as the place of sepulture of the famed highland hero Fingal. The village is noted for the picturesque beauty of its situation, and, like Kenmore, is a favourable point of tour of the central Highlands. A good commercial and family inn affords every requisite accommodation to visitors. Besides Kenmore, there is another village in the western part of the parish, called CLIFTON. To view the scenery of this district to advantage, the traveller is advised to take the road on the south-east side of the lake; and in passing down its banks, it is worth while to stop a little at a woody glen, where the family of Breadalbane have built a grotto opposite to a cascade, which is very well deserving of attention. This is named the Fall of Acharn, and has two or three falls in its descent. The greatest, however, is that which is opposite to the hermitage, where it suddenly precipitates itself over a projecting rock 240 feet. The hills here are mostly green, and afford good pasture. Fairs are held on the 20th January, the 5th of May, and the 26th of October.

KINCARDINE AND CULROSS.

KINCARDINE is a sea-port town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Tulliallan; 22 miles s. of Perth, 15 w. of North Queensferry, 10 w. of Dunfermline, 6 w. of Torryburn, and 5 E. of Alloa; situate in the southern detached part of the county, on the north bank of the Firth of Forth. At one period this place was called West Pans, from the salt-works established in it; these have long ceased to exist. With respect to business, the town is now chiefly distinguished for ship-building (particularly that description of vessels adapted to the coasting trade), and the manufacture of ropes and sail-cloth, a long-established branch; there is also a distillery in the neighbourhood. There are upwards of forty ship-owners in Kincardine; and a company is formed among them, called the 'Kincardine Assurance Shipping Association,' for mutual insurance of their vessels—a complete provision against individual loss at sea, and protection against fraud as to the condition of the vessels. There are two banking establishments here—the one a branch of the Glasgow Union, the other of the Commercial Bank of Scotland. A commodious harbour and an excellent quay have been constructed, which, together with the good anchorage-ground in the Forth, render this haven an eligible refuge for vessels in distress; the harbour will admit vessels of from three hundred to four hundred tons burden. The town is irregularly built; there are some good houses, but the streets are narrow, and, upon the whole, it is a place not of prepossessing appearance. A new church, however, lately erected, is a beautiful edifice, and an ornament to the town; the other places of worship are united secession and burghers' chapels. The principal seat in the vicinity is Tulliallan Castle, from which an extensive view of the surrounding country is commanded. A fair is held in Kincardine on the last Friday in July.

CULROSS is an ancient town and representative burgh in the parish of its name, four miles from Kincardine, partly seated on the acclivity of a hill rising from the Forth, the principal street running north from the shore. It formerly carried on an extensive traffic in salt and coal, and, previous to the union between the two countries, one hundred and seventy foreign vessels have been at one time in the roads; this trade is now entirely lost. The Earl of Dundonald erected some very extensive works for extracting tar, naphtha and volatile salt from coal; but it proving an unproductive speculation, it was abandoned, and the works were allowed to go to ruin. The principal employment of the working class, at the present time, is weaving for the Glasgow houses. Culross was erected into a royal burgh by James VI, in 1588; it has a chief magistrate, two bailies, a treasurer, with eight merchant councillors and six incorporated trades; the burgh is united with the towns of Stirling, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dumferline in returning a member to parliament.

The town and its vicinity possesses many objects of antiquity. In 1278 a monastery was founded, on rising ground behind the town, by Malcolm, Thane of Fife; considerable remains of this structure are yet extant. On the north side was the abbey church, which had a steeple in the centre, the latter still entire, as is also a part of the church, some years since repaired, and now used for public service by the parish: in a recess opposite the doorway is a monument of Sir George Bruce, in beautiful white marble, lying beside his lady; and along a low settle are arranged their seven children in kneeling postures. To the west of the town, on the banks of the Forth, is Castle-hill, anciently called Dunemarl Castle, meaning 'the castle near the sea:' it was the strong hold of the Macduffs, and, according to tradition, was the horrible scene of the murder of Lady Macduff and her children, perpetrated by order of the ambitious and sanguinary Macbeth; the fabric is now a total ruin. Near the church is a school, endowed by the late Patrick Geddes, Esq., for twenty children of both sexes. Fairs are held on the 3rd Tuesday of July and 3rd Wednesday of November.

As an extensive parish, in the south-eastern corner of the county, adjoining Aberdeenshire on the north, and the county of Forfar on the east; it extends seventeen miles in length, by from six to seven in breadth, comprehending the whole Glenshee district, and part of that of Strathardle. On some of the hills of this district, tradition fixes the scene as that where many of the Fingalian exploits were performed. A military way from Cupar Angus to Fort George proceeds through the northern part of the parish, by the Spittal of Glenshee. The southern quarter of the district is intersected by the Ardlie, along the left bank of which river passes a good road. In this part stand the parish village, and kirk, at the distance of seventy-two miles north of Edinburgh, twenty-nine north of Perth, and thirteen north-east of Logierait.

LOGIERAIT AND MOULIN.

LOGIERAIT is a village, in the parish of its name, 82 miles N. of Edinburgh, 23 N. by W. of Perth, 9 E. of Aberdeen, 8 N. of Dunkeld, and the like distance east of Aberfeldie. This village and its neighbourhood are noted for carrying on the distillation of whisky, in which branch there are several establishments. The principal part of the parish lies on the point of land formed by the junction of the Tay and the Tummel, extending, along the banks of each, seven miles. Not far from the church is an eminence, which commands a prospect of the greater part of the parish, which, including the windings of the rivers, the vales and pastures, with the woodlands, in some places extending to the rivers' banks, and the distant mountains, form together one of the richest landscapes that can be imagined. A chain boat commenced crossing the Tay at Logierait in August, 1824, for the accommodation of both foot and horse passengers. A coach and four may go into this conveyance without taking the horses from the carriage.

MOULIN is a large parish in the Highlands, extending towards Athol. It is intersected by the Briarachan and the Fernet, which unite within the district; and there are several lochs well stocked with trout, particularly lake Broom. The greater part of the parish is mountainous, but the vales of the streams are exceedingly beautiful. The village, which is very small, is five miles distant from Logierait; near it stands the ruins of the old castle of Moulin. In this parish is the pass of Killicrankie, noted for the battle fought there in July, 1689, between King William's troops commanded by General Mackay, and a body of highlanders under the Viscount of Dundee. There is a fair held at Moulin annually on the first Thursday in March.

MEIGLE

As a small ancient town, or village, in the parish of its name and district of Strathmore; 61 miles N. of Edinburgh, 18 N. by E. of Perth, 13½ N. W. of Dundee, 9 s. s. w. of Kirriemuir, 7½ w. of Glamis, 5 N. of Cupar Angus, and 4 s. of Alyth; pleasantly situate on the bank of the Isla. The parish is four miles and a half in length and two in breadth, is fertile and well cultivated, and, besides the Isla, is watered by the Dean, which is the northern boundary of the district. There are some beautiful seats in this part of the county, particularly Belmont Castle, the mansion of Lord Wharnclyffe, the gardens and fine plantations of which combine to render it the most delightful residence in all Strathmore. In one of the enclosures is pointed out a tumuli, where, it is said, the murderous Macbeth was deprived of his usurped power and his life in his fatal encounter with Macduff. A number of stones and mouments, supposed to be of Pictish origin, are also to be seen in this vicinity. In the church-yard of Meigle are some very antique monuments, which, tradition asserts, denote the grave of Queen Vanoria, the unfaithful wife of King Arthur; the figures, which, it is said, once delineated the history of Vanoria, are so defaced and dilapidated as to render all attempts at deciphering their meaning a fruitless task. About a mile north-east of the village, at the junction of the Isla and the Dean, are the remains of a Roman camp, called Carden, or Caerden, and noticed by General Roy in his work on the Roman antiquities of Scotland. Two annual fairs are held at Meigle—one on the last Wednesday of June, and the other on the last Wednesday of October; and a cattle market takes place on every alternate Tuesday from that day next the 6th of December to the Tuesday preceding the June fair.

METHVEN, MONEDIE, REDGORTON AND TIBBERMUIR.

METHVEN is a very neat village in the parish of its name, six miles west of Perth, situate on the high road to Crieff, from which it is distant eleven miles. It possesses a savings' bank, a body of freemasons, and a friendly society, the members of which have erected a large building for their monthly meetings, where the masons also assemble in lodge; there is likewise an agricultural society, who hold two meetings annually, which are very respectably attended. The ancient church of Methven was collegiate, being founded in 1433, for a provost and several prebendaries, by Walter Stuart, Earl of Athol, one of the younger sons of Robert II. About a mile from the village is Methven Castle, the residence of Robert Smythe, Esq., distinguished in Scottish history as the place where King Robert was defeated by the English army, under the Earl of Pembroke, in 1306. In the parish is also Balgowan (or Lynedoch Cottage), the beautiful and elegant seat of Lord Lynedoch, delightfully situate on the banks of the Almond, a rapid stream, with many falls. But, perhaps, the most interesting object in the parish is the grave of the celebrated 'Bessy Bell and Mary Gray,' whose beauty and seclusion from the world are held the subject of an admired Scottish melody. Fairs are held first Thursday of May and fourth Thursday of October.

The parish of MONEDIE is a small district, comprehending a square of about two miles, bounded by the parish of Auchtergaven on the north, and by that of Redgorton on the east and south. Until lately Monedie was annexed to the parish of Logie Almond.

REDGORTON parish is about six miles in length by two in breadth, extending along the Tay and Almond; besides which rivers there is the Shockie stream, and several other rivulets, each propelling considerable machinery in the district through which the waters pass.

TIBBERMUIR (or Tippermuir) is a parish of about the same extent as Redgorton, and is a manufacturing district, having within it extensive bleachfields and print-works. The ancient castle of Huntingtower is in Tibbermuir, and is worthy of notice as being formerly the seat of the Gowrie family, and the place where James VI was sometime confined, by the Earl of Gowrie and other conspirators, in the year 1592. Tibbermuir has given its name to the first battle that was fought between the Marquess of Montrose and the covenanters, though the conflict occurred more within the parish of Aberdalgie; in this sanguinary engagement the covenanting forces were totally routed.

MUTHILL AND ARDOCH.

MUTHILL is a village in the extensive parish of its name; 19 miles N. of Stirling, 16 W. of Perth, and 3 S. of Crieff; situate on the great military road from Dunblane to Inverness by Tummel-bridge. About a mile to the westward stands Drummond Castle, the ancient seat of the noble family of Perth; it is finely situate on a rock at the head of the vale of Strathearn, and attracts the attention and admiration of every stranger from the beautiful prospect it commands: a little to the eastward of this seat is the mansion of the present representative of the family. A new church was erected at Muthill in 1828, on a well-selected site; an episcopal chapel in 1835, and a parochial school in 1837: the ruins of the old church still remain. Several friendly societies are sustained by the inhabitants of the village, which has also the advantage of a news-room well supplied with newspapers; and there is a masonic lodge. A portion of the industrious classes are employed in weaving, for the large manufacturing houses, by resident agents, and in the vicinity are two distilleries.

The principal objects of interest in the parish, particularly to the antiquary, are two Roman camps; one at Straeath—the other at ARDOCH, a hamlet six miles from Muthill; the latter being considered one of the most perfect and interesting in Britain. The area of this camp is an oblong of one hundred and forty yards by one hundred and twenty-five, within the lines; the

PERTH.

THIS ancient and elegant city, a royal burgh, the seat of a synod and presbytery, and the capital of the county to which it gives name, is 43 miles N. of Edinburgh, 61 N.E. of Glasgow, 22 S.W. of Dundee, and 15 S. of Dunkeld; situate at the opening of an extensive plain, nearly surrounded, in the neighbourhood, by the most picturesque hills, and having in the distance a view of the sublime amphitheatre of the Grampians. The town is encircled by two beautiful and extensive meadows, and watered by one of the finest rivers in the kingdom—a stream which, reinforced by its hundred tributaries, pours into the ocean a larger volume of fresh water than any other river in Scotland. Even before the scenery was enriched by the hand of cultivation, the beauty of the situation excited the admiration of the Romans; it is recorded that, when Agricola's army saw this delightful plain and superb river, they exclaimed, as with one voice, Ecce Tiber! Ecce Campus Martius!—Behold the Tiber! Behold the Field of Mars! comparing what they then surveyed to their own river, and to the extensive plain in the neighbourhood of Rome. Agricola pitched his camp in the middle of that field, on the spot where the city now stands. Till of late years the traces of a fortification, called Cromwell's Fort, were visible on the South Inch, but are now entirely obliterated, and elegant new buildings have, from time to time, been erected on part of the space it occupied. It appears this city once bore the name of St. John: at the early period when the Scots' king succeeded to the Pictish throne, the church and bridge of Perth are supposed to have been consecrated to St. John the Baptist, as the tutelary saint of that town—and consequently it progressively obtained the name of St. John's Town, but was not recognized by that name in any of the public documents of that period. Fordun, in his history, remarks that he had found in some ancient writs that the town of St. John, now called Perth, was priority Bertha, the contraction being Berth or Bert; and as the letters B and P are used in the Gaelic language indiscriminately, it may naturally be presumed that the Highlanders changed the pronunciation of it to Perth; and from this circumstance, it is very probable, the present name of the place was derived: indeed, at the present time, the word Perth is pronounced by the Highlanders Peirt, or Peart.

Perth is most delightfully situate on the banks of the river Tay, about thirty-five miles from its mouth. The entrance from the Edinburgh road is on a gradual descent to the South Inch, and is beautifully picturesque. At the commencement of the Inch (a spacious green) is a grand avenue of trees which extends to the town, on the north side of which is another 'Inch' or green, equally delightful. These fine expanded lawns are embellished by the Tay, which flows along their green banks; the opposite shore being clothed in all the luxuriance that art and cultivation can produce. At the termination of the avenue of trees, on the beautiful green called the South Inch, stands the extensive dépôt, built by government, in 1812, for the reception of prisoners of war, considered the finest specimen of this species of architecture in Scotland; these very commodious and massive buildings contained, at one time during the war, 7,000 prisoners. The city itself is large and well built; the streets are long and spacious, well paved, and brilliantly lighted with gas, which is made at the public works; and many of the streets have been recently much improved. At the east end of Marshall-place, and forming the extreme south-eastern angle of the city, stands one of its finest architectural ornaments, the new 'water reservoir,' designed by the learned and accomplished Dr. Anderson, rector of the academy, and erected under his immediate superintendence. Greatly as the beauty of the reservoir redounds to the credit of the scientific doctor's taste, it is far surpassed by the admirable contrivance of the scheme by which the object of attaining so fine and so plentiful a supply of water was so successfully effected. In all wells sunk within or near the town, the water was strongly impregnated with salts, and consequently ill adapted for culinary purposes or cleanliness—the saline fluid flowing in much faster from the neighbouring high grounds than the soft water from the river. To obviate this, Dr. Anderson devised the plan of excavating a filtering bed, three hundred feet long, in the gravel, in the upper end of Friar-toun island, which, having a branch of the river flowing on either side, secretes only the water of the Tay, and produces an unlimited quantity of this indispensable element—pure, soft and limpid at all times and seasons; this is conveyed to the reservoir by means of a suction pipe, of great power, below the bed of the principal branch of the river, and thrown up into the tank by two beautiful steam-engines, each of ten-horse power: the project has been crowned with such complete success, that works upon the same principle are now being carried into effect in Berlin and Paris; the expense of this noble work is defrayed by an assessment on real rents above a certain amount, while the poor are supplied gratis. Opposite the North Inch, and fronting the Tay, is an elegant row of houses called Rose-terrace; in the centre are erected the public seminaries (noticed hereafter). At the south end of Rose-terrace is a handsome range of houses forming a crescent, in the highest degree ornamental to that part of the town. In the course of the last ten years a great many fine buildings have been erected on the opposite side of the town, and extending towards the south-west; they consist, generally, either of elegant villas or detached self-contained houses, surrounded by small parterres. The range of villas on St. Leonard's-bank, skirting the western boundary of the South Inch, at the summit of a gentle elevation, is particularly striking; and the inhabitants enjoy the advantage of a view from these edifices, not surpassed in beauty by any in Britain. In addition to these, the whole of the tasteful erections in King-street and King's-place have been raised within the period above-mentioned. In Kinnoul-street, Athol-street, and Charlotte-place, handsome residences have likewise been erected; and at right angles with Rose-terrace a row of commodious and comfortable mansions, called Barossa-place, is of recent formation. Adjoining the North Inch is a bridge that crosses the Tay; this fine structure, elegant though unadorned, is built in a most substantial manner. Immediately adjoining the bridge is the village of Bridge End, leading to Kinnoul Hill, whose summit, at the distance of a mile and a half, can be most agreeably ascended by Montague-walk, winding through a wood about one-half the distance; the precipice of Kinnoul is above six hundred feet perpendicular, and affords a most enchanting prospect: the noble river that flows along the base of this stupendous height, the hills and more concentrated objects in the fore-ground, and the grandeur of the mountainous perspective, present a panorama that can scarcely be equalled in beauty and extent. Near the eastern declivity of this remarkable cliff stands the beautiful Castle of Kenfauns, in the centre of the delightful demesne of the same name, the property of the amiable and patriotic Lord Gray. On the eastern bank of the river, about two miles from Perth, stands Scoon Palace: this edifice (of so much note in history) has been re-erected, and is a most magnificent pile of building; it is surrounded by extensive pleasure grounds, highly embellished with wood and water. At a short distance from the palace is the chapel, also rebuilt; it is environed by majestic trees, which give it an air of pleasing solemnity. Before the reign of King James, the coronation of the kings of Scotland was solemnized in the palace of Scoon. The Earl of Mansfield is hereditary keeper of this palace, and proprietor of the spacious park and grounds that surround it; the noble family reside here, and hold great state, for nearly six months in the year: it is visited by great numbers of strangers and tourists, particularly in the summer season; ready access can be obtained at all times, by a written order (which is as readily granted), on application to the noble earl's agent, Mr. Coudie, Blackfriars House, Perth.

The public buildings in Perth, especially those of late erection, display much taste and spirit. The most prominent is the County Rooms. This structure, completed after a design by Mr. Smikey, is a model of correct, simple and dignified architecture, sufficiently ornamented to be chastely elegant; it is situate at the extreme end of South-street, on the banks of the Tay, and forms a noble object when viewed from the opposite side of the river; it resembles one of the many Grecian edifices that have continued to be the admiration of successive centuries; and the front, which faces the water, is considered one of the most handsome in Scotland; it is embellished by an elegant portico in the centre, and twelve massive fluted columns, which support a beautiful pediment; the whole is built of fine hewn freestone. The interior is correspondingly tasteful and commodious—the entire combines convenience and elegance in every part. From the entrance hall a passage leads off to the county hall, which is a splendid room, sixty-eight by forty, and occupies the south wing; the centre contains the spacious justiciary hall, of semicircular form, and a gallery most judiciously constructed, which will hold one thousand persons; attached to this hall are likewise rooms for the witnesses, retiring-rooms for the jury, &c.; the remainder of the building, on the same floor, includes the sheriff's court and room, his clerk's office, and an arched fire-proof room where the records of the town are deposited; above is a capacious ball and card room, &c. &c.: the whole arrangement is elegant, and the embellishments are appropriate. Directly in the rear of this edifice the new gaol is erected, divided into two prisons—the northern side for felons, and the other for debtors; from the gaoler's house, fronting the interior of the entrance gate, a subterraneous passage leads to the prisoner's bar in the justice hall. Near £30,000. have been expended in the erection of these buildings.

MANUFACTURES, COMMERCE, &c.—There are some extensive manufactures carried on in Perth; among these are ginghams for umbrellas, shawls, muslins, and other cotton fabrics, with some linens. The maritime importance of the city is rapidly increasing—a number of vessels are added yearly to its shipping: this has, in no small degree, been caused by the extensive export of potatoes to the London market, and by the enterprise of individuals in the pursuits of general trade; not a few are engaged in foreign commerce, and there have been instances lately of voyages to and from the West Indies direct by vessels of this port. Some years ago an act of parliament was obtained for improving the navigation of the Tay, the access to the port, and the accommodation for the shipping; this embraced the deepening of the fords, and the construction of a tide harbour, a wet dock, and a short canal to connect these: the bill, however, has been found so impracticable in its operation, that the design of the canal and dock has been abandoned, even after having been partially excavated. The tide harbour is now in progress on a modified plan; the river has been deepened by the agency of a powerful dredging machine; and in a short time vessels of two hundred tons burden will have access to, and find safe anchorage and proper accommodation in, the harbour. Lately the government has granted the privilege of bonded warehouses, which it is considered will be of great advantage to the trade of the port of Perth.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT AND REPRESENTATION.—The government of the city is vested in a lord provost (who is also sheriff and coroner), four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nineteen councillors; the council thus consists of twenty-six members—all of whom (with the exception of the dean of guild) are, since the passing of the burgh reform bill in 1832, elected by the suffrages of the £10. constituency of the four elective wards; the dean of guild is a member of council ex-officio, and is chosen by the guild in corporation; the lord provost and magistrates are elected by the councillors, and returned from amongst themselves. The public officers of the municipality are two city clerks, a procurator fiscal, and a city chamberlain. The town court sits every Tuesday, and the council meets on the first Monday in every month. The police of the city is under the charge of a superintendent; and the quiet and good order of the town is materially promoted by the power the magistrates have of summary punishment for petty offences: the expense of this establishment is defrayed from the collection and sale of the public manure, and five per cent. chargeable on all rents above £3. per annum. Perth was constituted a royal burgh, with a confirmation of all its former privileges, in the year 1210, by William the Lion; James VI accepted the municipal office of provost of the city, and partook, at the Cross, of the festivities which were prepared for that extraordinary occasion. Since the passing of the reform act, this county has been successively represented by the Earl of Ormelie (now Marquess of Breadalbane), General Sir George Murray, and the Hon. Fox Maule, the latter now the sitting member; the city returned Lawrence Oliphant, of Coudie, Esq. to the first reformed parliament, and he was re-elected without opposition in 1834.

RELIGIOUS EDIFICES.—The churches in Perth, with some few exceptions, do not display any striking external beauties. St. John's Church is a very ancient structure, and supposed to be one of the first churches built with stone in this country; it was originally erected in the form of a cross, and called the Kirk of the Holy Cross of St. John's Town; although it has been almost entirely remodelled by alterations at different periods, yet enough of the ancient part remains to testify that it once was a very fine edifice; some extensive repairs have greatly improved its exterior appearance in later times: on the outside of the tower are affixed a set of musical bells, covered by a kind of potico, and a singularly looking spire surmounts the whole. The great reformer, Knox, thundered forth his declamations from this venerable pile when denouncing the corruptions of the old establishment. At the extremity of High-street, in Methven-street, stands St. Paul's Church, a more modern and not inelegant structure of stone, with a steeple surmounted by a spire. Opposite to this edifice is a meeting-house of the religious body denominated 'Glassites.' St. Leonard's Church, a very handsome structure, designed by Mr. Mackenzie, a local architect, was erected in King-street in 1835—the expense defrayed by joint-stock shares and private subscriptions; it is incorporated with the establishment. The Episcopal or English Church is in Princes-street; it is small, but the interior is neat, and furnished with an excellent organ. The Baptists have lately raised a commodious chapel in South-street, and the Roman Catholics a large one in Melville-street; the latter has a fine organ. In High-street stand two meeting-houses belonging to congregations of the now united associate seceders. There are several other places of worship in the town, viz. the Gaelic chapel, two Relief chapels, Original Burghers' and Old-light Seceders' chapels, &c.; a list of all of which, where they are situate, and the respective ministers attached to each, will be found under the appropriate head in the directory.

CHARITABLE, EDUCATIONAL AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.—The city of Perth contains several charitable and well supported institutions for the sick and destitute, viz., the Lunatic Asylum, the Perth Dispensary, a Society for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, the Destitute Sick Society, &c.; and several male and female schools for the education of poor children; all of which are conducted on the most liberal and enlightened principles. The Lunatic Asylum.—This extensive building was commenced on the 18th October, 1822; it is situate on an eminence of considerable elevation, on the north-west side of the hill of Kinnoull; the order of architecture is the Grecian Doric—chaste, yet handsome and ornamental; it was originally constructed to contain one hundred patients, the funds for its erection being left by a Mr. Murray, a native of Perth; the design was supplied by Mr. Burn, of Edinburgh; and the edifice is one of the most complete and judiciously planned receptacles, for those unfortunate persons, in the kingdom. The accommodation in this asylum is so superior—the management so efficient—the mode of treatment and discipline of the patients so highly approved—and the success attending the exertions of the superintendent, the matron, and the physicians, so strikingly apparent—that the applications for admission, from all parts of the country, became so numerous and urgent, that it was considered necessary, in 1834, to make very extensive additions, which are now completed, on the same plan with the original portion of the work. Some years ago the institution was incorporated by royal charter, under the title of 'James Murray's Royal Lunatic Asylum.' The munificent bequest of the benevolent donor has been sufficient for all the erections, and a considerable sum still remains as an endowment. (On the 9th of May, 1837, a few days only after the above remarks were penned, a large portion of this magnificent structure was accidentally destroyed by fire.) Another extensive public edifice is at present in course of erection, near County-place, just where the road from Glasgow (by Auchterarder) enters the west side of the town; this is the County and City Infirmary, and fever wards, elegantly designed by Mr. W. M. Mackenzie, before mentioned, superintendent of public works in the city. This institution will form a prominent public ornament, and will be eminently beneficial, supplying, as it does, a desideratum of which the want has long been felt—no public receptacle for the diseased, or for the treatment of sudden or violent injuries, having hitherto existed in the county. The foundation-stone of this building was laid in the summer of 1836, with great masonic 'pomp and circumstance,' by the Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird, provincial grand master of the eastern district; its pecuniary foundation was laid, about ten years before, by a bequest of the late Dr. Brown, of Charlotte-street, to the extent of £500, for the special purpose; this lay at interest till the death of the late Marquess of Breadalbane, who bequeathed £3,000, to the public charities of Perth, £600, of which was devoted by the executors of the noble marquess to this useful and benevolent undertaking; various other individuals have made bequests in its favour, and subscriptions have flowed in from different classes.

There are, perhaps, few towns where literature is more cultivated than in Perth; many valuable institutions for literary pursuits and the encouragement of the fine arts are most respectably supported. The Antiquarian Museum possesses a considerable collection of valuable coins, medals and manuscripts, besides a great variety of natural curiosities, amongst which is a cabinet of minerals, containing upwards of twelve hundred choice specimens, tastefully and scientifically arranged. In the centre of Rose-terrace are erected the Public Seminaries, of fine stone, embellished with noble pillars. This institution is established on the most liberal principles; the course of education is completed in two annual sessions of ten months each, the session commencing in October and ending in July; the masters comprehend a rector for mathematics and the higher branches of education, and his assistant; a master for the modern languages, one for drawing and painting, and another for practical arithmetic and accounts. The Grammar School has also a rector and his assistant; the fees of attendance paid by the students are very moderate. A beautiful structure was some few years since erected near the bridge, which forms a handsome termination to George-street; it is dedicated to the memory of a late Provost-Marshal, and is a monument evincing esteem for departed worth: the form of this edifice is circular, ornamented with an elegant Ionic portico; the body of the building is surmounted by a dome, and the whole is imitative of the Pantheon at Rome; in the interior are halls for the public library, and for the museum of the literary and antiquarian society of Perth: this structure, devoted to the promotion of literature and the fine arts, was raised by private subscription. The Exchange Coffee-room, in George-street, lately rebuilt, is of handsome exterior, and the internal accommodations are well suited for the purpose. The Freemasons' Hall is a neat and not inelegant building, in the Parliament-close, High-street; it contains a handsome spacious room, which is principally used as an auction-mart for respectable sales; it was built on the site of the old Parliament-house, in the year 1818, and is the property of the Royal Arch Lodge of Freemasons. An elegant little Theatre stands in Athol-street; the interior is fitted up with taste and neatness, in a style quite unique. On the Inches many of the citizens enjoy, and ardently engage in, the athletic sports and exercises, especially cricket, football, and the national game of golf: the Royal Perth Golfing Society has at present his Majesty the King as patron, his Grace the Duke of Buccleugh as captain, and includes in its roll of members a great many of the nobility and gentry; the hall or parlour of the society is at 21, Charlotte-street. The Barracks, erected in 1795, at the west end of Athol-street, form a handsome building, originally intended to accommodate two hundred cavalry, but lately converted to the use of infantry; they will contain a full regiment.

The weekly market-day is Friday: the fairs, since the year 1822, have been altered by the magistrates and town-council, on account of the general inconvenience resulting from the days formerly appointed falling on the same days, or at the same time, with the fairs of Falkirk and other places; therefore they are now held on the first Fridays of March, April, July, September and October, and the second Friday of December: a cattle market is likewise held, on the South Inch, on every Friday from the third occurrence of that day in December to the middle of June; and a horse market takes place on the first Friday in May.

The population of the city, according to the census of 1831, was 20,016; but to this it would be proper to add the amount of the denizens of BRIDGE END suburb, which, being in the parish of Kinnoull, was not included in the returns for that year: this addition would make the population of Perth upwards of 23,000.

RATRAY AND NEW RATRAY,

RATRAY is a pleasant village in the parish of its name, 58 miles N. of Perth, 13 N.E. of Dunkeld, 4 w. of Alyth, and 2 E. of Blairgowrie; situate in the north-eastern part of the county, and built on the declivity of a hill in rather a straggling manner. The principal occupation of both sexes of the inhabitants consists in the spinning of flax and the weaving of coarse linens. To the south-east, on a rising ground called the Castle-hill, remain the vestiges of the ancient Castle of Ratray; and about two miles north of the village stands Craig Hall, on a rock that rises one hundred feet perpendicularly. The small but neat village of New RATRAY is of modern erection. The places of worship are, a handsome church, built in 1820, and a chapel for a secession congregation. The parish of Ratray lies on the left bank of the river Ercht, and is bounded by Beudochy on the east, and on the opposite side of the river by Blairgowrie; it extends four miles in length by two in breadth; the surface is much diversified—the land on the banks of the river (where are flax-spinning mills) being arable and fertile, while the higher grounds are only suited for pasture. There are two annual fairs; one is held on the last Friday in April, and the other on the last Friday in August.

POST, RATRAY.—Letters arrive from and are despatched to BLAIRGOWRIE.

WITH THE NOBILITY, GENTRY AND CLERGY IN THE PARISHES OF CARGILL, COLLACE, KENFAUNS, KILSPINDIE, AND ST. MARTIN'S.

SCONE, or NEW SCONE, is a neat village, in the centre of the parish of its name, two miles north-east of Perth. It is worthy of notice principally on account of its ancient palace, for ages the residence of the early

Scottish monarchs, the place of their coronation, and the scene of many important and brilliant events. In this vicinage formerly stood an abbey also, founded by Alexander I, in the year 1114. Some historians have described Scone as the ancient capital of the Picts; it certainly, however, was the chief seat of Scottish royalty as far back as the time of Kenneth II. In the church of the abbey just mentioned was preserved the famous stone (brought from Ireland, according to some writers, by Fergus I), which was used as the coronation-seat, and upon which all the successive Scottish kings were crowned till the calamitous days of John Balliol, when Edward I carried it to England, where it continues to form one of the appendages to regality in Westminster Abbey; the last monarch crowned at Scone was Charles II, January 1st, 1651, when on his expedition into this kingdom. On the site of the ancient palace a splendid new edifice has been raised, as a seat of the Earl of Mansfield—pleasantly seated on an extensive lawn sloping gently to the Tay, and surrounded by large and umbrageous plantations. In this modern mansion much of the antique furniture has, with judicious taste, been preserved; in particular, a

THORNHILL,

OR THORNHILL IN MONTEITH, is a small village in the parish of Kincardine, 45 miles w. by n. of Edinburgh, 39 s.w. of Perth, 5 s. of Callander, and 4 from Doune. The houses of the village are detached, and the only public building is the church. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in agricultural pursuits, and a few in weaving; there are, however, several respectable shopkeepers, and two tanneries. The parish lies to the southern quarter of the county, in the 'Strath of Monteith'; it is triangular in figure, one side of which is twelve miles in length, another sixteen, and the third about seven; altogether it contains a superficies of six thousand acres, four thousand of which are arse land, lying along the Forth; the moss of Kincardine covers a considerable portion of the arse land. Adjacent to the Teith, and on the road from Stirling to Doune, is the highly ornamented and improved estate of Blair-Drummond, upon which operations of great magnitude have been successfully carried on, in reducing the quantity of superincumbent moss.

POST OFFICE, Archibald Monteith, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every Monday, Wednesday and Friday forenoon at eleven, and are despatched every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoon at one in winter and five in summer.

WEEM, AND DULL WITH ABERFELDIE.

WEEM is an extensive Highland parish, in the district of Breadalbane; it is so mixed up with and intersected by neighbouring parishes, that no accurate idea can be given of its extent and boundaries. The surface is mountainous and rugged; it is watered by the rivers Tay, Lyon, Lochy, and Dochart. The church of Weem is 74 miles N. N. W. of Edinburgh, 34 N. W. of Perth, and 9 W. of Legerait. Near the church is Castle Menzies, the seat of Sir Neil Menzies, Bart.; a handsome building with lofty turrets, surrounded by fine plantations, pleasure-grounds and orchards—a spot presenting a refreshing contrast to many other parts of the district. A justice of peace court, for the recovery of debts of £5. and under, is held in the parish on the first Monday monthly. There are four annual fairs, namely, on the second Tuesday of February, the last Thursday of April, the Thursday preceding the second Tuesday of September, and last Thursday of October.

DULL is also a large parish, and assimilated in its localities with Weem so that a just estimate of its extent cannot be arrived at; it comprehends, however,

RENFREWSHIRE.

THIS county, of great importance as connected with the manufactures of North Britain, is bounded on the south by Ayrshire, and on the east and north-east by Lanarkshire; the Clyde river and firth separates it from the county of Dumbarton on the north, and the firth of Clyde divides it from Argyleshire on the west. In figure it is nearly triangular—measuring from north-west to south-east about thirty miles, and varying in breadth from ten to fifteen miles: altogether the county is estimated to contain about 154,000 English acres, one-half of which may be considered in a state of cultivation. At the epoch of the Roman invasion this district was inhabited by the Damni, a British tribe who also occupied the adjacent vale of Strathclyde; the invaders concentrated themselves at a spot near the present site of Paisley, to which they gave the name Vandunaria. In after times the Romanized inhabitants were subjected to the sway of the Scots, and in 1097 submitted to the silent revolution which took place under Edgar, when the Celtic customs were changed for the municipal laws which the Scoto-Saxon government gradually introduced. In the reign of David I, Walter, the son of Alan, fled from Shropshire, during the troublous conflicts of Maud and Stephen, and settled in the district, where David I made him steward, and gave him lands to support the dignity of his office. Besides these possessions he subsequently acquired the whole district of Strathgryfe, and the western half of Kyle, in Ayrshire, which hence was called Kyle Stewart. Such was the manner in which the first of the royal family of Stewart settled in Scotland. At this period the country in this quarter was in a semi-barbarous state, but Walter, the Stewart, introduced new and civilized usages. He settled many of his military followers on his lands, and, by founding the abbey of Paisley, introduced a body of instructed men, who taught the ancient people domestic arts and foreign manners. For several centuries this district formed a portion of Lanarkshire: in 1404, Robert III created a principality, consisting of the barony of Renfrew and the whole of the Stewarts' estates, with the earldom of Carrick and the barony of King's Kyle—all of which he granted, in a free regality, as a provision for his son James; and this principality continued, in after-times, the appropriate appanage of the eldest sons of the Scottish monarchs: in consequence of these arrangements, the identity of the barony of Renfrew and the shire of Lanark was dissolved, and the former placed under the jurisdiction of a separate sheriff.

SOIL, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of this county is very much diversified. In those parts of the high grounds which are not covered by heath and moss, a fine light soil on a gravelly bottom is generally found; in the portion formed of detached hills, the surface is a thin earth based on gravel; and in the level district the plough or spade sinks through a deep, rich, brown loam. More than one-half of the shire, comprehending the west and south-east portions, is hilly, and devoted to pasture; the cultivated districts comprise the north, the north-east, and the centre of the county, and consists partly of low distinct elevations, and partly of a level tract of rich loam between Paisley and the river Clyde. The hilly part of the county varies in elevation from five hundred to six hundred feet; the hill of greatest altitude in the shire is about twelve hundred and forty feet high. Owing to the great demand in this county for dairy produce, and that also of the garden and the fold (arising from the vicinity of large and populous towns), nearly two-thirds of the arable land in the shire is kept under grasses; and hence the county of Renfrew enjoys but little celebrity as an agricultural district. The minerals of this shire are of very considerable value—coal, limestone and sandstone abounding in various parts of it: the most extensive coal-works are those of Quarreltown, near the centre of the county—Polmadie, on its north-east boundary—and at Hurler and Househill, to the south-east of Paisley. As many as eight or nine different lime-quarries have been wrought at the same time in Renfrewshire. Ironstone accompanies all the coal strata, and is particularly embodied in the composition of the shores of the Clyde. In point of commercial and manufacturing importance, this county is second only to that of Lanark, and with it unites in constituting the great manufacturing district of Scotland. The MANUFACTURES are chiefly cotton and silk goods, including, among various articles and fabrics, shawls of infinite diversity in texture and price. While Paisley is the head-quarters of the trade in these articles, the business of weaving is pursued, to a greater or less extent, in almost every town, village and hamlet. The free export of the manufactured goods is promoted by the different sea-ports on the Clyde, especially by Greenock—by which, also, foreign produce is imported; the trade is further assisted by the Forth and Clyde Canal, which connects the county with many other shires.

RIVERS AND LAKES.—The waters of Renfrewshire are of no great magnitude in themselves, but by the industry and enterprise of the inhabitants of the district they are rendered of material importance to society. The principal streams are the WHITE CART, the BLACK CART, and the GRYFE; all of which ultimately unite, and fall into the Clyde below Inchinnan-bridge—that is, about half-way down the river between Glasgow and Port Glasgow. The White Cart (which, by way of superdistinction, is generally denominated 'the Cart,') has its creative springs at Eaglesham, in this county, and in the high grounds of East Kilbride, in Lanarkshire; and, passing Paisley in its course, joins the Gryfe at the bridge above-named. The Black Cart issues from the beautiful Loch of Castle Semple, in Lochwinnoch parish, and, descending northward, falls in with the Gryfe at Walkinshaw. The Gryfe rises in the high grounds above Largs, and flows eastward till it meets the Black Cart; the Gryfe bestows the name of Strathgryfe upon the vale through which it flows. The LAKES are Castle Semple Loch, Queenside Loch (in the parish of Lochwinnoch), two lochs in Neilston parish, and several smaller ones. The first-named (Castle Semple) is situate in the southern border of the county; its banks are beautifully wooded in some places; and it contains a small island, on which stand the ruins of a castle.

Renfrewshire comprehends fifteen entire parishes and four parts of parishes; it contains two representative burghs, Port Glasgow and Renfrew, which join with Rutherglen, Dumbarton and Kilmarnock in returning a member to parliament, and PAISLEY and the COUNTY send each a representative.

Note.—(a) Beith and Dunlop parishes are mostly in Ayrshire, and were there wholly entered in 1801 and in 1811. In 1821 that portion of Beith parish situate in Renfrewshire contained 67 inhabitants, and Dunlop 68; in 1831 Beith 65, and Dunlop 56. The entire parish of Beith contains a population of 5,117, and Dunlop 1,043.

(b) The parish of Cathcart is partly in Lanarkshire; the whole contains 2,282 inhabitants.

(c) Govan parish is mostly in Lanarkshire, and was wholly entered there in 1801 and 1811. In 1821 the number of inhabitants in that part of the parish lying in Renfrewshire was 550, and in 1831, 710;—the whole contains 5,677.

The total annual value of Real Property, in this county, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £265,534.

CATHCART

Is a pleasant village in the parish of that name, partly in the county of Lanark, but chiefly in that of Renfrew, distant from Glasgow two miles. Its original designation was Caer-Cart, i. e. the Castle on the river Cart. The parish is of considerable extent, and contains above 3,000 acres, almost wholly arable. In it are two paper mills, and a corn mill. The surface of the land is agreeably diversified with hills and dales, and presents, in many situations, great picturesque beauty. Agriculture is the occupation of a great proportion of the inhabitants; the very summits of the hills are ploughed and cultivated. There has lately been built a new parish church (in the Gothic style) which will accommodate 750 persons, and a new school house, for the accommodation of the parish. The field of Langside, in this parish, is remarkable for being the scene of the last fruitless effort of the unfortunate Mary, to regain her crown. An eminence is still pointed out where the queen stood during the engagement. The old castle of Cathcart above alluded to is a very conspicuous ruin, placed in a commanding situation, with two sides defended by the Cart, to which there is almost a perpendicular descent of a tremendous depth. It belonged to the Lords Cathcart, and was dismantled not quite a century since.

EAGLESHAM

Is a neat modern village, 8 miles s.w. of Glasgow and 11 s. of Paisley, pleasantly situate in the lower part of the parish to which it has given its name, about a mile to the north-west of the old castle of Polnoon; it is composed of two rows of houses; a tributary rivulet to the Cart running through the intermediate space. The old village was demolished in 1769, and was shortly afterwards rebuilt under the direction of the late Earl of Eglintoun, who also, in 1790, erected the church, which is of octagonal form, and has an elegant steeple, furnished with a good clock and a fine-toned bell; there is likewise a secession meeting house, and one for a reformed presbyterian congregation. The barony of Eaglesham, and the patronage of the church, has been in the Earl of Eglintoun's family since the year 1250. An extensive cotton-mill is established here, which gives employment to a number of the industrious classes; and there is also a grain-mill. Fairs are held on the third Thursdays of May and August (o. s.), and the first Tuesday in November (N. s.).

Is a small sea-port town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Innerkip, three miles west of Greenock, beautifully situate along the south side of a fine bay on the river Clyde. The haven is favoured with excellent anchorage ground, and vessels to and from Glasgow, Port Glasgow and Greenock frequently take refuge here in contrary winds: a small but commodious quay has lately been constructed, at the cost of about £5,000, which has nine feet depth at low water—an advantage possessed by no other on the Clyde. The town, which is neatly built in the form of a crescent, is a fashionable resort, in the summer months, of families from Glasgow and other places, to enjoy the pleasure and benefit of sea-bathing. An extensive ropework has been carried on here for upwards of sixty years by the Gourrock Ropework Company; and there is a quarry of excellent whinstone, suitable for pavement, at present working, which employs from thirty to forty hands; a great quantity of this stone is carried to Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, &c. It is said that this port was the first place in Great Britain where red herrings were prepared. The lands of Gourrock were incorporated into a burgh of barony, by a charter from William and Mary, dated the 24th of April, 1694, with very extensive powers, and, among other privileges, gives authority to hold a weekly market and two annual fairs, but the successive proprietors have never yet thought proper to avail themselves of this privilege; the present proprietor is Lieut.-General Duncan Darroch. A neat chapel was built in the year 1773; from the increase of inhabitants, and the influx of casual visitors in the sum-

GREENOCK

THE first sea-port in Scotland, is 22 miles from Glasgow, 15 from Paisley, and 66 from Edinburgh; situate on the south bank of the river Clyde. The site of this town is unrivalled for the command of grand and picturesque scenery, combining water, wood and mountains; among the latter is seen the majestic Ben Lomond, while others of less magnitude serve to render more obvious its immense and towering elevation. In the early part of the eighteenth century Greenock was a small village, inhabited chiefly by fishermen, and without quay or harbour; it now, however, possesses its harbours, which of late years have been improved at a considerable expense, and are most commodious and very capacious; they extend 2 200 feet from east to west, and are of sufficient depth to float vessels of great burthen; but the road is narrow, as a sand-bank extends from Dumbarton to a short distance below Greenock, at which place there is always deep water, and good anchorage for ships of the largest class. The quays are spacious, and have well-constructed sheds, supported by iron pillars, for the security of merchandise against the weather; there are also good graving and other docks, capable of receiving vessels of any size. The streets of Greenock have been greatly improved; and within a recent period a number of very clean, regular, and even elegant streets have been erected towards the west, for the accommodation of the more wealthy portion of the inhabitants: a tendency has likewise been displayed, by this class of society, to rear streets and detached villas along the heights behind the town, where the view of the firm and of the Highland scenery beyond is a source of unending pleasure. The thoroughfares and principal shops are lighted with gas, supplied from works erected in 1828. The markets for meat, fish and vegetables are convenient, and well supplied with most of the requisites of life.

Among the public edifices of this town, the Custom-house decidedly ranks first—it is truly a grand national structure; the selection of its situation is also most appropriate; the grand front faces the water, leaving a fine open space from the edge of the quay. The building is of the Grecian order of architecture; in it the business of both the customs and excise is transacted: the entrance to the former is at the north front, facing the river, and the entrance to the excise office is at the east front; both fronts are ornamented by four elegant lofty Doric pillars, supporting a handsome pediment: this fine edifice was erected under the direction of Mr. Burn, of Edinburgh, who was the architect also of the Assembly-rooms, situate in Cathcart-street, which he completed in the same elegant order and style. Under the same roof as the assembly rooms is a commercial news-room, and in Cathcart-square is another establishment of the same character, both of which are efficiently supplied with the various journals of the day and the magazines of repute. Greenock is the birth-place of the illustrious Watt, the perfecter of the steam-engine, who was born in 1736: in commemoration of this circumstance, the son of that eminently scientific individual is now erecting a library in Union-street, at his sole expense, upon ground given by the late Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, Bart.: the building, which is to be formed from a design furnished by Mr. Blower, architect, of London, will cost £3,000; a statue of the deceased engineer, from the chisel of the celebrated Chantry, will be placed within the entrance of the edifice; £2,000 is the sum to be paid for the execution of this appropriate ornament, which will be raised by subscriptions, doubtless with little difficulty.

Among the most important branches under the head of, or connected with, manufactures, are six ship-building establishments, the yards of two of which are so complete as to rank second only to those belonging to the crown; there are also two extensive engine-works, the like number of potteries, three foundries, an equal number of tanneries and breweries, four ropewalks, six sugar-refining houses; manufactories for flint glass, woollen cloth, sail-cloth, and straw plait; soap and candle works, a distillery, a large mill for spinning flax, and another for making paper: but in nothing is Greenock more celebrated than in the building and fitting-up of steam-vessels—furnishing them not only for London, Bristol, Liverpool and Dublin, but also for the Mediterranean, Portugal, Spain, South America and New South Wales. Greenock being the first sea-port town in North Britain, its mercantile and shipping trade extends to very considerable importations of rum, sugar, molasses, mahogany, &c., from the West Indies; rice, potash, timber, &c., and naval stores, from America; and wine, fruit, &c. from Portugal: all ships are likewise employed from hence in the trade of the Baltic, and also in the fisheries of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Since the opening of the commercial intercourse with India and China, the merchants of this place have prosecuted the trade to those countries with great spirit and commensurate success—the Clyde ships, from the superiority of their construction, never failing to secure a preference of engagements. Greenock derives vast advantage from the application of steam to navigation, there being a great number of vessels propelled by this powerful auxiliary constantly traversing the Clyde, to and from Glasgow, and the intermediate places on the banks of the river, where they lie to for the convenience of passengers; large and elegant steam-boats also leave this port for Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, Londonderry, Campbeltown, Ayr, Inverness, and other intermediate places in the Highlands, at stated periods: indeed no town in the kingdom affords greater facility to travellers, by this mode of conveyance, than Greenock.

In all probability this thriving seat of commerce will, at no distant period, become the station of some considerable cotton factories, and participate with Glasgow and Paisley in the extensive trade enjoyed by those places, there being in the neighbourhood of the town the greatest amount of water-power to be found in the country: this is derived from an artificial brookwater having been thrown across a valley, in the bottom of which a stream of water flowed, now forming a condensed body of that element two miles long and half a mile wide, having a depth of sixty feet, and at an elevation of five hundred feet above the level of the sea; it furnishes, at present, sites for thirty-two mills, with power to any extent that may be required: it is also rendered subservient to the supply of the town with water for domestic purposes, a necessary with which it was formerly but ill provided. This splendid work, which is calculated to impress the stranger with a high sense of the character of the inhabitants of Greenock, was completed in 1827 by a company, under the title of the 'Shaw's Water Company.' There are in this commercial town six banking establishments (including branches), viz., the Greenock Bank, the Renfrewshire Banking Company's bank, branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland and the Glasgow Union, and the Provident Savings' Bank.

The municipal government of Greenock is vested in a provost, four bailies, a town treasurer and ten councillors, who have the power of making laws for the advantage of the burgh, and of maintaining peace and order within its limits. The police is under the most efficient regulations, both that of the town and that of the harbour; the management of the latter is confided to its commissioners (along with the town council), who are elected annually. The town has its gaol and bridewell, which were erected in the year 1810. The burgh sends one member to parliament: the present representative is Robert Wallace, Esq.

Greenock comprehends three parishes, respectively termed the 'West parish,' the 'Mid parish,' and the 'East parish'—all being erected out of, and separated from, the original parish of Innerkip. The first, which may be styled the mother parish of the three, includes the western part of the town and the greater proportion of the country district; the church stands near the shore, and is surrounded by an old burying-ground. The mid parish comprehends the central parts of the town; the church is situate in a small square, fronting along a street which descends to the quay; this is an elegant structure with a lofty steeple (the site extremely well selected to render it an ornament to the town), and forms a highly interesting object in the prospect from the river. The east parish possesses a place of worship near Rue-end; it was erected in 1774, as a chapel of ease. Besides the churches and chapels under the establishment, there are places of worship for various sects of dissenters, and a Roman catholic chapel; some of these are of recent erection, are embellishments to the town, and highly creditable to those under whose direction and superintendance they have been founded and raised—(a list of all, and where they are situate, with the names of the respective ministers, appears under an appropriate head in a subsequent page). The inhabitants of this actively mercantile town are by no means indifferent to the pursuits of literature and science; the libraries and reading-rooms have been briefly noticed; the citizens can boast an excellent academy, several parochial and other public schools; and the Highlanders' Society are constructing handsome buildings for schools in Roxburgh-street. There is but one newspaper published in this town, the 'Greenock Advertiser,' which issues on Monday and Thursday; it is ably conducted and well supported. There are several charitable institutions, among which the Infirmary, erected in 1809, is ornamental as a public edifice, and its utility is universally acknowledged. At a short distance from the town is a Lunatic Asylum, built in 1824—it is called 'Fancy Farm;' the situation it occupies is most salubrious and pleasant, and it is admirably conducted by a Mr. Wm. Thomson.

About a mile from Greenock, close to the banks of the Clyde, is a battery mounting fourteen guns; but there are no barracks, and it is seldom that any soldiers are quartered in the town. There are several very agreeable bathing villages in the vicinity; one of these forms a very pleasing and picturesque object from the quays—being seated under the mountains on the opposite side of the firth, which is six or seven miles across: several steam-boats go to and from those different villages during the bathing season.

The weekly market is held on Friday; and there are two annual fairs—one takes place on the first Thursday of July, the other on the fourth Tuesday of November.

HOUSTOUN, BRIDGE OF WEIR, CROSSLEE, ERSKINE, AND KILMALCOLM.

HOUSTOUN is a manufacturing village, or small town, in the united parish of Houstoun and Kilallan; 14 miles from Glasgow, 7 from Paisley, and the like distance from Port Glasgow; pleasantly situate on both sides of the Houstoun burn. It consists of two long streets, one on each side of the rivulet: the inhabitants are chiefly weavers of silk and cotton goods. At the south end of the village is a considerable bleachfield, and at the east end a small parish church. The houses are good mason-work, generally two stories in height, and covered with blue slate. It is said that the town is partly built of the stones that once composed the Castle of Houstoun, which formerly stood in this neighbourhood, to the east—an ancient mansion, the residence of the knights of Houstoun, demolished in 1780 by a proprietor of the estate. The market place of the village is ornamented by a pedestal of considerable antiquity; it consists of an octagonal pillar, nine feet in length, having a dial fixed on the summit, crowned with a globe. About one mile from Houstoun, and three from Johnstone, most delightfully and romantically seated in a valley, is WEIR BRIDGE, more familiarly known by the name of the 'Bridge of Weir.' It is the boundary of the parish in this quarter, being divided from the parish of Killarcan by the river Gryfe; on this stream are five extensive cotton-mills, in which are employed a considerable number of the industrious classes. A new burghers' chapel has lately been erected here, and the inhabitants have recently made application for the establishment of a post-office, the want of which is much felt in this populous manufacturing distract. About one mile hence is Crosslee, another village participating in the prosperity enjoyed by different places in this parish, as the seat of manufactures. The united parish is about six miles in length by three in breadth: the low grounds are in general fertile, and beautified by some fine natural tracts of wood; coal, and abundance of limestone and freestone, lie beneath the surface of the land in various parts of this favoured district. An annual fair is held at Weir Bridge on the second Tuesday of May.

The parish of ERSKINE is six miles in length, and from three to four in breadth; situate on the Clyde, opposite to Kilpatrick. The ground rises gently from the margin of the river, and is laid out in rich plantations, orchards and corn-fields. Erskine House, the seat of the late Lord Blantyre, is a beautiful mansion, seated amidst tasteful pleasure-grounds facing the Clyde. The Kirktown of Erskine is less than a mile inland, at the distance of seven miles from Paisley; the church is a handsome stone building. Erskine, it is said, is the oldest ferry on the Clyde; there is a neat and comfortable inn at this place.

The village of KILMALCOLM is situate on the east side of the parish of its name, on the road from the Bridge of Weir to Port Glasgow; ten miles from Paisley, seven from Greenock, and rather more than that distance from Johnstone. It is an agricultural district, intersected by the Gryfe and the Duchal streams, whose banks are well cultivated, while a greater proportion of the surface of the parish presents the less pleasing contrast of moss and moor—the moss of Kilmalcolm extending over a large part of its southern quarter.

INNERKIP

As a village in the parish of its name, six miles s.w. of Greenock; situate on the Kipp water, which intersects the district from east to west, and falls into the Clyde. The village is sometimes called 'Auld-Kirk,' and it anciently was termed Inverkip—the latter appellation being derived from its being seated at the mouth of the Kipp water. The Daff, and some other rivulets, likewise irrigate the district; in their courses they are broken into small cascades, which produce a pleasing effect; and the meadows through which they pass are finely embanked. The inhabitants of the village are chiefly fishermen, but it obtains some advantage from being the resort of persons for sea-bathing. Ardgowan House, the seat of the late Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, Bart., is pleasantly situated on a kind of peninsula, a little north of the village; it is a fine modern building, surrounded with beautiful and romantic pleasure-grounds. Besides the parish church, which is a neat and handsome edifice, surmounted by a spire with a clock, there is another place of worship—a small dissenting chapel, holding connexion with the congregational union of Scotland.

JOHNSTONE, ELDELSLIE, KILBARCHAN & LINWOOD.

JOHNSTONE is a very considerable manufacturing village, within the landward part of the Abbey parish of Paisley,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles w. from that town, 11 w. from Glasgow, 8 n. from Beith, and 14 s. e. from Greenock; most agreeably situate, contiguous to the Black Cart river. The increase of population in this locality is unparalleled in Scottish statistics: in 1782 it contained but ten persons; the system of feuing was then commenced here, and since that period it has progressively increased to upwards of six thousand resident inhabitants. Trade and commerce, likewise, have kept pace with the augmentation of its population—there being now in the village numerous cotton-mills and foundries, extensive machine manufactories, and the public gas-works; a branch of the Paisley Union Bank has lately been established here, and there are two principal inns. Contiguous to the town are several valuable coal-mines, which produce to their respective proprietors a very considerable revenue; the most extensive of these mines belongs to Ludovic Houston, Esq., who is proprietor or superior of Johnstone. The town is very regularly laid out; it has several good streets, a spacious square in its centre, and a large area for a market-place: the houses are for the most part substantially constructed, and roofed with slate; the shops are numerous, and well stocked with various domestic and useful commodities—the principal are lighted with gas. About twenty-six years ago, a canal was opened between this place, Paisley and Glasgow, which has proved of the greatest utility. From an eminence on the Paisley road the village of Johnstone has a pleasing appearance; to the left, at a short distance, stands Johnstone Castle, surrounded by thriving plantations, and commanding a fine view of the country for many miles round. To the west of the town, immediately beyond the river Cart, is the seat of Sir William Napier, a delightful residence. Johnstone possesses nothing to invite the antiquarian or amuse the traveller; but curiosity may be amply gratified by a visit to the village of ELDELSLIE (a mile east of this place), once the peaceful residence of the renowned Wallace.

The places of worship are a chapel of ease under the establishment, relief and united secession chapels, and a methodists' chapel. The public institutions are a subscription library, a news-room, a mechanics' institute; bible, missionary and friendly societies; a town's school; and various Sunday schools. Fairs are held at Johnstone on the second Thursday in July, the last Thursday in October (for cattle), and the last Friday in December (for horses).

KILBARCHAN is a considerable manufacturing village in the parish of its name, one mile and a half from Johnstone, and about five miles from Paisley; situate on the southern declivity of a hill, and pretty regularly built. Upwards of eight hundred looms are employed, in this village and its immediate vicinity, in the manufacture of silk, cotton shawls, robes, &c.; the young women of this place are reputed as being amongst the most expert in the art of tambouring, or embroidering flowers, &c., on fine muslin and silk. In the centre of the village is the school-house, with a tower, on which is the statue of Habbie Simpson, the well-known Scottish piper, born in this parish; it was executed by Archibald Robertson, a young sculptor from Greenock.

The places of worship are the parish church, a relief meeting-house, and a baptist chapel. Kilbarchan is placed under a committee of town management, with justices of peace resident in the neighbourhood. The inhabitants have formed themselves into a variety of friendly associations, a society for mutual protection against loss by fire, a curlers' society, and the Kilbarchan (and neighbourhood) agricultural society, which has stated shows of cattle, when premiums are awarded; there is also a masonic lodge in the town, and two public libraries, the latter containing several thousand volumes. There are two fairs held here annually: one on Lillia's day, the third Tuesday in July—the other on Barchan's day, the first Tuesday in December (both old style); the last is considered one of the greatest horse-markets in this part of Scotland.

About three miles from Johnstone, and three and a half from Paisley (in the above parish), is the thriving manufacturing village of LINWOOD, on the property of William Napier, of Blackstone, Esq. It contains one of the largest cotton manufactories in the county of Renfrew, worked by Messrs. Brown and Co.

LOCHWINNOCH, NEW TOWN OF BELTREES AND HOW-WOOD.

LOCHWINNOCH is a large village in the parish of its name; 16½ miles s.w. of Glasgow, 9½ s. w. of Paisley, 6½ s. w. of Johnstone, and 3½ N. of Beith; situate on the north-west bank of the beautiful lake from which it derives its appellation, and surrounded by scenery of a most interesting and romantic character, highly attractive to the tourist; among which the lovely loch, the banks of the Calder, the sublime cataract of Itekan Linn, the bottomless Garratt's Linn, and the remains of several old castles, are all eminently worthy of a visit from the stranger to these parts. The lake, which stretches in a northerly and southerly direction, lies in the eastern part of the parish; it receives the Calder water on its west side, and its issue forms the Black Cart river; it is about two miles in length by one in breadth, but was formerly much more extensive, having been contracted by an embankment, whereby several hundred acres of land have been obtained and brought into cultivation. On the north-west side of the loch stands Castle Semple House, the seat of Colonel Harvey, the situation of which is in the highest degree picturesque; it occupies the site of the ancient castle of Semple, founded by Lord John Sempill about the year 1500; it was demolished in 1735. On a small island in the lake is the 'Peel,' the remains of some forgotten strong hold, of which nothing but a vault now exists. Lochwinnoch possesses some claims to notice as a place of manufactures; it contains two extensive cotton-mills, two bleach-fields, a thread and a woollen mill, &c.; there is also established here a branch of the Western Bank of Scotland. The village is ornamented by a new parochial church, having a handsome steeple; there is likewise a chapel belonging to the united secession. Justice of peace courts are held here on the first Saturday in each month. There are three annual fairs: the first, called the 'trades' race,' on the first Tuesday in May; the 'farmers' race,' on the second Tuesday in June; and the 'fair of Hill,' on the first Tuesday in November—all old style.

How-wood is a small village in the parish of Lochwinnoch, three miles and a half from that town, situate on the high road between Beith and Glasgow. About a mile and a half nearer to Lochwinnoch, in that parish, is a place called NEW-TOWN OF BELTREES, another small village—neither of which contains any object worthy of particular description.

MEARNS WITH BUSBY AND NEWTON.

MEARNS is a village in the parish of its name, seven miles from Glasgow and eight from Paisley; the parish lies in the south-eastern part of the county, and extends seven miles in length by about three in breadth.
 The surface of the land is finely diversified by pleasing undulations, rising gradually from east to west; it is generally fertile, and adapted to the purpose of the dairy, while other portions of the district afford excellent pasturage. The great road from Glasgow to Ayr and Kilmarnoch runs through the whole length of the parish; and lately a new road has been opened from Glasgow, which, passing Newton, joins the former road a little beyond the King's Well Inn. In the parish are two bleach-fields, calico printing works, and an extensive cotton spinning mill—the latter at Busby, a small romantic village in the parish of Mearns, five miles from Glasgow. At NEWTON (or Newton Shaw), another village in Mearns, three miles and a half from Busby, stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice with a handsome spire, in which is an excellent clock; and the interior contains seven hundred sittings; a new secession chapel, which will accommodate a congregation of five hundred persons, has been recently erected here. The village, which is well built and of pleasing appearance, possesses a superior inn. The only object of antiquity in the parish is the Castle of Mearns, near that village; it is a large square tower, seated on a rocky eminence, commanding an extensive and beautiful prospect; it is encompassed by a strong wall, and the entrance appears to have been secured by a drawbridge: this interesting relic of former times is now out of repair, and dismantled; it belongs to the family of Blackhall, of Ardgowan, but its origin is lost in obscurity. The parish is adorned by several elegant modern seats and mansions; and the lands are irrigated and refreshed by the waters of three lakes, one of which, named Black Loch, is nearly two miles and a half in circumference.

NEILSTON is a village in the parish of its name, of considerable importance as a manufacturing locality, 9 miles n.w. of Glasgow, the like distance n.e. of Stewarston, and five from Paisley; eligibly situate on the river Lavern, on the road to Irvine. The parish, which extends eight miles in length, by from two to four in breadth, is particularly worthy of notice as possessing within its boundaries a great number of manufactories and public works, including bleach-fields, print-fields, cotton spinning mills, dye-works, coal mines, freestone quarries, &c. The inhabitants of the parish support several institutions and societies of a charitable, friendly, and educational character; there is also a lodge of freemasons, a mechanics' institute, and an agricultural society. From the summit of a ridge of hills, which extend through the entire length of the parish, the prospect is grand and comprehensive; and several plantations, which were raised some years since, add materially to the beauty of the scene. There are two small lakes, called Loch Lebo and Loch Long: from the former issues the Lugton, a tributary stream of the Garnock; and the latter discharges itself by the Lavern, which runs north-east to join the Cart. Fairs for cattle are held on the third Tuesdays of February, May and October, old style; and there is a meeting in July, at which horse-racing takes place.

BARRHEAD is a rapidly increasing village in the parish of Neilston, four miles from Paisley and seven from Glasgow. From the increase of trade, and consequent extension of manufactories and works, the population of this village and its immediate vicinity has been doubled within the last ten years, and the number of inhabitants now amounts to at least four thousand, nearly all of whom are dependent upon the following establishments and works, at or near Barrhead, viz.: three large spinning mills, and the like number of powerloom weaving factories; six print-works, four bleach-fields, three collieries, &c. In 1833 were constructed works for supplying with gas the various manufactories in the village and neighbourhood. Barrhead possesses a mechanics' institute, to which is attached a large library; and a chapel for an united secession congregation. A large sum has lately been subscribed for the purpose of erecting a place of worship in connexion with the Church of Scotland. PAISLEY

IS a burgh of barony and the seat of a presbytery, in the parish of the abbey of Paisley; 50 miles w. by s. of Edinburgh, about 7 miles s. by w. of Glasgow, and 17 s. e. of Greenock. This active manufacturing town, so distinguished for the beauty of its shawls and of its muslins, and its extensive fabrication of thread, stands in a healthful and picturesque situation on the banks of the White Cart, about three miles above the confluence of this river with the Clyde. The Burgh, or Old Town of Paisley, is on the western side of the river; the New Town on the eastern side. The High Church, with its lofty spire, rises from a fine eminence, the south side of which, and its summit, are covered with buildings, and its northern slope laid out in gardens: this central ridge forms a natural terrace, which runs westward from the river nearly half a mile, terminating abruptly at a point where the Romans had a fort and a fortified camp, now the site of a public bowling-green, whence is a prospect extensive and beautiful; with this camp several minor stations are believed to have had communication, each placed on the summit of a neighbouring eminence, such as Woodside, the Knock, and Castlehead; while the name 'Causieside,' still retained by one of the streets of the burgh, is thought to indicate the former existence of a Roman road, leading to or by the principal station. Paisley is generally supposed to have been the Vanduarua of Ptolemy, a notion apparently supported by the etymology of the name Vanduarua—the British words wen dur signifying the 'white water,' and thus expressing even the present distinctive appellation of the river on the banks of which the town is built. In ancient days Paisley was distinguished only for its abbey; and the shrine of St. Mirren, which it enclosed, was resorted to by multitudes of pilgrims from all parts of Scotland; this saint, St. James, and the Virgin Mary, divided the tutelary honours between them. This great and opulent monastic establishment was founded, in the year 1160, by Walter, great steward of Scotland, and son of Allan, the first of the Stewarts, who for a long period made this abbey their family mausoleum; the religious order of the Clugni were the first occupants: it was originally a priory, but was afterwards elevated to the rank of an abbey—its lands being, by Robert II, erected into a regality, of which the abbot was lord. By Abbot George Schaw, in 1484, the abbey precincts were surrounded by a lofty wall of hewn stone, a mile in circumference, the greater part of which has been demolished; still a good deal of it remains, as does an inscription setting forth, in uncouth rhyme, Abbot Schaw as its builder; this inscription is on a house in Lawn-street. In 1588, the reformation having taken place, the abbey and lands were made a temporal barony in favour of Lord Claude Hamilton, third son of the Duke of Chateaurault, and on whom was conferred the title of Lord Paisley. The abbey lands having been transferred from the Earl of Abercorn to the Earl of Angus, and from him to Lord Dundonald, the greater portion became the property, by purchase, of the Marquess of Abercorn, who let it on building leases—so that the parks, the orchards and the gardens of the abbey subsequently became the site of the new town of Paisley, and the stones from their wall form a portion of the materials of which the houses were built. The abbey church, mutilated as it now is, constitutes the most interesting public structure of which Paisley can boast: the nave, which in the interior exhibits three tiers of arches, is neatly fitted up, and contains some curious monuments and sepulchral inscriptions; it is the parochial church of an extensive rural district, lying around the town, and called the Parish of the Abbey of Paisley. The choir is levelled to within a few feet of the ground; the north transept is more entire, and displays in its large, well proportioned northern window a striking relique of ancient ecclesiastical magnificence. Three windows of good size and elegant design, with a recessed doorway, form the principal ornaments of the western front; south of the nave is yet integral, though without its arcades or cloister court; on the eastern side of which is a gothic chapel, appropriated as a place of sepulture for the Abercorn family. The remarkable decree of resonance possessed by this little building (which is still, from the circumstance, called the sounding aisle,) has been magnified by most writers; much of the effect which it formerly produced is now, however, lost, from the reconstruction, within the chapel, of a large altar tomb, consecrated to the memory of Marjory Bruce, wife of the great steward, Walter, as well as mother to Robert II, whose remains were removed from the monastery in 1770. The apertures in the brick-work, formed to close up the interstices of a once beautiful eastern window, likewise contribute to weaken the echo. It is not improbable that, for some time after the suppression of its abbey, Paisley languished; and when Crawford, the first regular historian of Renfrewshire, produced his learned and useful work, the town consisted of no more than one principal street, and a few narrow lanes or wynds branching from it. Its population did not, at that time, exceed 3,000; nay, some assert that its inhabitants were then only about 1,500 in number. In the earlier part of the last century it contained 4,290 persons; in 1792, 24,592; in 1811, 36,722; in 1821, 47,006; and in 1831, 57,466: it will, however, be proper to observe, that in these numbers the population of the country part of the abbey parish is included.

That portion called the Old Town is considerably more extensive than the New, and contains all the chief warehouses of the manufacturers; many of its streets are well built, and there are three parallel lines running from east to west of very great length. The New Town, comprising many streets, occupies a level surface on the eastern side of the Cart. Of both portions of the town, the entire length, reckoning from the first suburban houses on the east to the last occurring ones on the west, can scarcely be less than two miles; while the extreme breadth of Paisley, from north to south, must reach at least a mile and a half. East, north and west of it are suburbs with distinct names; such are Williamsburgh, Dovesland, Lylesland, Carriage-hill, Charleston, Maxwellton, Ferguslie, &c. The eastern and western parts of the town are connected by three bridges, respectively of one, two and three arches, and called individually the Old, the Sancel and the Sneddon bridge. Gas was first introduced in 1824, and the principal streets are illuminated by it; pipes, also, are now being laid down for the conveyance of water to the town, a convenience of such paramount importance as to cause surprise that it has been so long delayed. A most conspicuous public building is the Castle, a large towered, turreted and embattled fabric, comprehending, besides a variety of rooms and offices for county and burgh meetings, and for public functionaries, a county gaol, a debtors' gaol, a bridewell, and a prison chapel; between the noble pile which forms the front edifice and the prison in its rear are two courts for exercise and air. The steeple of the former town-house of Paisley yet remains, and forms an architectural ornament to the area called the Cross. By a charter granted by James IV, in 1488, in favour of Abbot George Schaw, Paisley was created a burgh of barony. The present municipal body consists of a provost, four bailies, a treasurer, a procurator fiscal and ten concillors, with a town clerk and chamberlain; the provost and bailies act as justices of the peace. For the New Town, and for the Burgh, a separate police establishment is organized; the latter is divided into eight police wards. Paisley returns one member to the legislature; the present representative is Archibald Hastie, Esq.

MANUFACTURES AND TRADE.—A young lady of some historical notoriety was the original cause of Paisley becoming a manufacturing town. In 1697 a daughter of the Laird of Bargarren, aged eleven years, named Christian Shaw, preferred a charge of bewitching her (either from credulity or revenge) against a servant girl, with whom she had quarrelled, and nineteen alleged confederates, who were all condemned, and five of the number burnt on Gallow-green, Paisley! The inciter to this detestable act of superstitious cruelty subsequently acquired great skill in spinning fine yarn; her first production having been sold advantageously at Bath, by Lady Blantyre, to the lace-makers, stimulated Miss Shaw to extend her transactions by availing herself of the co-operation of a relative in Holland; the demand for this thread soon became eager, and the most extensive manufactures that arose in Scotland at that period acknowledged 'the bewitched lady' as their originator, who afterwards became the wife of the minister of Kilmours. Coarse linen checks were the first fabrics produced by the Paisley looms; to these succeeded others of a lighter kind; silk gauze then took the lead, about the year 1760, and Spitalfields soon yielded to its more successful competitor—for such was the celebrity of the Paisley gauze that warehouses were engaged for its sale in London, Dublin and Paris. The produce of this article, together with sewing-thread, lawn and linen gauze, amounted for the year 1784 to £579,000, and more than 26,000 persons were employed in their fabrication. But, alas! the demand for the popular gauze rapidly decreased, and soon became insignificant; muslin, cambric and cotton thread were the next productions of Paisley industry and skill; to these succeeded silk and cotton shawls, and scarfs and plaids composed of silk and merino wool, ascending in price from five shillings to fifteen guineas—chenille shawls (made wholly of silk), Canton crape, Persians and velvet; and these still continue to exhibit the ingenuity and taste of the Paisley weavers, in the manufacture of which they have no rivals. In Paisley and its neighbourhood are numerous thread and several cotton spinning mills, bleaching and calico printing works, dye houses, power-loom factories, iron and brass foundries, alum and copperas works, timber yards, breweries, distilleries, a soap manufactory (the only one in the county), and a very extensive tannery. The value of the various goods manufactured annually, in Paisley and its vicinity, is estimated at more than a million and a half sterling; while in the year 1760 the estimated amount did not exceed £15,000. There are five banking concerns in Paisley: these are, two most respectable native banks, styled the 'Paisley Banking Company' and the 'Paisley Union Banking Company'; the others are branches of the 'Glasgow Union,' the 'Western Bank of Scotland,' and the 'Bank of Scotland.'

Between the years 1786 and 1791, the White Cart river was, at an expense of £4,000. (and partly by means of a navigable cut, which enables vessels to avoid certain shallows in the river), made navigable to the town, for sloops of from forty to fifty tons burden; but by the employment of dredging machines, and other measures adopted for widening and deepening the Clyde, it is expected the Cart will shortly permit much larger vessels to ascend it, including steam-boats. A new dock and quay are rapidly being constructed on the western side of the river. The Glasgow and Ardrossan canal passes along the southern verge of the town, presenting at one point a fine basin and wharf; the passage-boat upon this canal forms an agreeable medium of rapid intercourse between Paisley, Glasgow and Johnstone. The railway from Paisley to Renfrew, which was opened in April, 1837, is also a delightful mode of communication between these places; the carriages are propelled by locomotive engines.

PLACES OF WORSHIP, INSTITUTIONS, &c.—Paisley contains eight churches connected with the establishment, viz., the Abbey, the High Church, St. George's, the Martyr's, the North, the South, the Middle and the Gaelic churches; there are also five united secession chapels, two relief, one reformed presbytery, one episcopalian, two independent, two baptist, two methodist, an independent methodist, and one for the numerous Roman catholics in Paisley—the (situation of each, and the names of their respective ministers, will be found in a subsequent page). The following institutions and schools are liberally maintained by the inhabitants of Paisley, namely—the Dispensary and House of Recovery, the Town Hospital or Poor-house, the Deaf and Dumb Institution, the Philosophical Institution and Humane Society; the grammar school, town's mercantile and mathematical school, town's English school, Hutcheson's charity school, Roman catholic school, Educational Association schools, a Sessional school, sabbath, infants', and several parochial schools. There are some friendly associations, bible and missionary societies, and three public libraries. The numerous reading-rooms in the town evince that the inhabitants partake of that thirst for knowledge which is a general characteristic of the natives of Scotland. Opposite to the Cross is a handsome structure: the exterior of the upper part is adorned with Ionic pillars; the interior includes a public coffee-room of noble dimensions, on the tables of which newspapers, reviews and magazines abound; and the place is liberally thrown open to the visits of strangers. The press of Paisley furnishes a weekly newspaper; it is published every Saturday, and, in common with all the journals of Scotland, is edited and conducted with great talent: a clever Directory of Paisley, and other towns in the county, is also printed and published annually in the town. There is a neat theatre, which is opened occasionally for those who derive amusement from such a source; and races are held annually in August, on a picturesque course half a mile from the town, on the Greenock road. For the votaries of Terpsichore, the Assembly-rooms now erecting in Moss-street, when completed, will present a graceful temple.

Paisley may boast of having been the birth-place or residence of several individuals noted for genius or science: Wilson, the celebrated American ornithologist, and Tannahill, the lyric poet, were natives of Paisley; and the distinguished Dr. Witherspoon, once minister of the parish, wrote several of his best works here, prior to his emigration. The country around Paisley (except on the north, where a wide-spread fertile plain expands itself), is most agreeably diversified by gentle risings—by wood, by water—and, in short, by all the constituents of the soft and beautiful in landscape scenery. A fall in the Cart, just above the town, and an aqueduct bridge over the Ardrossan canal, deserve mention, and from the stranger a visit.

A secluded building, in the northern environs of the town, is appropriated to the slaughtering of cattle. The weekly market is held on Thursday; and the fairs on the third Thursdays of February and May, and the second Thursdays of August and November. Each fair lasts three days; the St. James's-day, in August, is the most considerable, being distinguished by horse-racing and various shows, which attract a great concourse of persons from the surrounding country.

POLLOCKSHAW AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

POLLOCKSHAW (or Pollokshaws) is a manufacturing town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Eastwood, two miles and a half from Glasgow; situate on the road to Irvine, near to the White Cart river, and in a pleasing valley sheltered by plantations. It consists of several well-built streets, regularly laid out, and possesses a town-house surmounted by a tower.
The trade of this place is very considerable, there being several hundred looms in motion, manufacturing goods for the Glasgow houses, besides extensive cotton mills, bleach-fields, and dye and print works, the entire affording employment to a large and industrious population. The town was erected into a burgh of barony in 1812, in favour of Sir John Maxwell, of Pollock, and the government of the town vested in a provost, baillie, six councillors and a treasurer. Exclusive of the established church of Eastwood, there are places of worship for hughers and for an united secession congregation. The parish of Eastwood is four miles in length by three in breadth—bounded on the north by Govan and Gorbals, and on the south by Neilston and Mearns. The district is generally under a creditable state of cultivation; and, besides the stream of the White Cart, is watered by the Auldhouse burn.

PORT GLASGOW

IS one of the most important sea-ports in Scotland, and is an opulent burgh of barony and regality; pleasantly situate on the south bank of the Clyde, between nineteen and twenty miles below Glasgow, and two miles east of Greenock. It is protected on the south by a range of high hills, and an extensive view of corresponding eminences presents itself on the north.
The lower grounds in the vicinity of the town are embellished with handsome villas, to which are generally attached excellent gardens. The town stands immediately contiguous to the old barony and village of Newark, at the eastern extremity of which is the ancient castle, formerly occupied by the barons of the name of Maxwell, now the property of the heirs of Sir

M. Shaw Stewart; it is a fine old ruin, in good preservation; and the situation is much admired for its commanding view of the Clyde and adjacent picturesque scenery, particularly that wild and singularly formed rocky eminence on which Dumbarton castle stands. Port Glasgow is neatly built, the streets running at right angles. It possesses a town-house (erected by the magistrates, in 1815, at a cost of nearly £12,000.), comprising a council chamber, a court hall, a prison and bridewell, and offices for the accommodation of the town clerk, fiscal, and other public offices; also a public coffee-room. This pile of building, which is of the finest Grecian architecture, is surmounted by an elegant spire one hundred and fifty feet in height, and adorned with a good clock. The custom-house is a handsome building, and contains offices and rooms for the different officers in that branch of the revenue.

The trade of this port town has been, for these many years, gradually improving; the tonnage employed in the West India and American trade is very considerable, and it is now esteemed one of the first sea-ports in Scotland: it enjoys the superior advantage of an extensive wet dock, recently constructed at an enormous expense; the tide harbours, which are large and commodious, are remarkable for facility of entry and egress, and are accessible to vessels of the largest tonnage at all times of the tide; contiguous to the harbours is a large graving dock, the first of the kind constructed in Scotland, and still preserved in excellent order. The town contains four large ship-building establishments; and the inimitable model of the celebrated

Mr. John Wood, particularly in steam-boat building, has long attracted and still continues to excite the admiration of the scientific in this important branch. Various manufactures, on a large scale, are established in this prosperous place, consisting of sugar refineries (the most extensive in Scotland), chain-cloth works, roperies, iron and anchor foundries, sail-cloth factories, cooperages, block-making, and a steam weaving mill, the latter employing about five hundred persons.

Port Glasgow formerly belonged to the parish of Kilmalcolm; in 1695 it was erected into a separate parochial district; and, in 1775, the town was instituted a burgh of barony, and its government confided to two magistrates and eleven councillors; it joins with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Dumbarton and Kilmarnock in returning a member to parliament. Within these few years, through the public spirit and pious generosity of the inhabitants, a new parish church has been erected upon the site of the old one; in external appearance it is handsome, and its interior is chaste, elegant and convenient: there are also meeting-houses for members of the united secession and the unitarians, and a chapel of ease. There are two public institutions for education, namely, the parochial school and Beaton's free-school. The weekly market of Port Glasgow is held on Friday; and there is one annual fair, which takes place on the third Tuesday of July.

RENFREW AND THE PARISH OF INCHINAN.

RENFREW is an ancient town and royal burgh, the capital of the county and parish of its name; 50 miles w. of Edinburgh, 13 E. by s. of Port Glasgow, 6 w. of Glasgow, and 3 N. of Paisley; situate half a mile south from the Clyde, and one mile east from the river Cart. In old charters the name of this place is variously written Ranfrew, Rainfrew, and, as it is now spelt, Renfrew; and is composed of the two British words ren (or rhyne), a point or promontory, and frew, a flux or flow—implying 'a point of land subject to be overflowed by the tide,' which certainly is applicable to the local character and figure of a part of the parish. Walter, the first Stewart, built a castle here, on a small height called the Castle-hill, on the margin of the bank of the Clyde; and Renfrew was an early and favourite residence of the Stewarts, long ere they succeeded to the Scottish throne. The present town consists of one long street, from which several lanes issue. At the west end of the main street stands the gaol, and at the east end there is a considerable bleach-field; this, with a distillery in operation at Yoker, and a starch manufactory, are the principal establishments which come under the head of manufactures, if we except about three hundred looms employed in weaving some of the finer descriptions of silks and muslins for the Paisley and Glasgow houses. The town has communication with the Clyde by means of a canal, up which vessels of considerable tonnage can pass at spring tides: at the junction of the artificial cut with the river the magistrates have recently erected a commodious and substantial stone wharf, at which the largest vessels that frequent the river can discharge and load with the same facility as at Glasgow; from this part a branch line communicates with the Paisley and Renfrew railway, lately completed, whereby goods discharged are conveyed to the former town in less than a quarter of an hour: the main line of the railway is connected with two wharfs on the Clyde (about one hundred yards below the stone wharf), where passengers embark in, and land from, the different steam-boats navigating the Clyde, and from hence are whirled along the railway to and from Paisley by locomotive carriages. As a royal burgh, Renfrew is governed by a provost, two bailies and sixteen councillors; it joins with Port Glasgow (and other places therein named) in returning a member to parliament—the present representative is Dr. Bowring. Although Renfrew is the county town, meetings of the freeholders and the head courts only are held in it, the seat of the sheriff being at Paisley. The vicinity of the town is adorned by some fine estates and mansions; of the latter, the most worthy of the stranger's notice are Elderslie, the residence of Alexander Speirs, Esq., M.P., and Blythswood, the seat of Archibald Campbell, Esq., lord lieutenant of this county—both situated on the banks of the Clyde, and their beauty increased by delightful plantations. The market day is Saturday; and fairs are held on the third Tuesday of May, the second Friday of June, and the third Friday of October.

The parish of INCHINAN is situate to the north-west of Renfrew; it is watered by the Clyde, the White Cart and the Gryfe rivers. At the confluence of the two latter streams is a fine bridge of ten arches, forming a communication with Renfrew: to enable vessels (navigating between Paisley and the Clyde) to pass this bridge, a canal has been cut, across which has recently been thrown a very handsome iron swing bridge, the workmanship and elegance of which attract much admiration. The road from Glasgow to Greenock passes through the whole length of this parish.

ROSS AND CROMARTY SHIRES.

ROSS-SHIRE.

THIS is a large section in the north of Scotland, being eighty miles in length and nearly the same in breadth (exclusive of the Isle of Lewis), extending from the German Ocean to the Atlantic. On the north it is bounded by Sutherlandshire, on the south by Inverness-shire, on the east by the Ocean and the small county of Cromarty, and on the west by the Western Sea: on the east coast the county terminates in an obtuse point, and on this side it is deeply penetrated by the bay of Cromarty; the western shore is laid open by many gulphs or arms of the sea, the waters of which roll far within the land. From the numerous indentions made by lakes and friths, the form of Ross-shire is of the most irregular character. The main land (exclusive of Cromartyshire) is computed to contain about 1,850,800 acres, and Lewis Isle 359,000; of the first number, 5,900 belong to the district of Ferintosh, a part of the county of Nairn.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The portion of this extensive county capable of cultivation is very small: the arable lands extend along the eastern coast, and are found in patches here and there on the western; a great proportion of the low lands of Easter Ross, and a small portion of those near Dingwall, is loamy clay; the rest is light soil, of various qualities. The CLIMATE of this county is unsteady, and exhibits the extremes of long, dreary, cold winters, and some very hot summer weather; the west coast is subject to heavy rains. The whole of this comprehensive shire, except a district on the east side, called Easter Ross, is mountainous, wild and pastoral: the mountains are for the most part in groups, many of them reaching a considerable elevation; Ben Wyvis is considered the most lofty—it rises upwards of 3,700 feet above the level of the sea. Almost the whole of the west coast presents magnificent mountain scenery, and the interior is in general picturesque.

The natural forests, which formerly covered large tracts, have nearly all disappeared, with the exception of the birch, and some oaks, in different parts of the county; the remains of fir woods are extensive, and the trunks of oaks of an immense size are still to be seen. Planting is prosecuted with great spirit—large additions have been in progress for many years. The improvements effected in farming, within the last forty years, have completely changed the aspect of the district of Easter Ross; and indeed this portion as well as other parts of the county may now compete, in the skilful management of the land, with any other division in Scotland: to such perfection have the agriculturists of Ross-shire brought their system, that they now grow wheat to the amount of twenty thousand quarters, and export grain in quantities of full ten thousand quarters. The mineralogy of the shire is interesting to the geologist, but of little value in a directly useful point of view: limestone occurs in several localities on the west coast, but there is a general destitution of coal throughout the county. The salmon fishery is carried on to a considerable extent in the different rivers and estuaries, and that for herrings is pursued with great success on the east coast.

RIVERS and LAKES.—The principal rivers on the east side of the county are the CONAN, which flows into the Cromarty frith, and the OIKEL and the CARRON, which pass into the Dornoch frith; the largest stream on the west coast is the EWE, which has a short course from Loch Maree. The Conan and its principal branch, the Raney (or Blackwater), form some falls of considerable height and beauty. The indentations of the sea, or salt-water lakes, on the west coast, proceeding from north to south, are Loch Enard, Loch Broom, Loch Greinord, Loch Ewe, Gair-Loch, Loch Torridon, Loch Keeshorn, Loch Carron, and Loch Alsh, with (its inner southerly arm) Loch Duich. The county likewise possesses a great number of lakes of fresh water in the interior; but none of them, save Loch Maree, near the west coast, are of sufficient magnitude or beauty to excite interest.

Ross-shire comprehends thirty complete parishes, and three parts of parishes; it has three Royal Burghs, namely, DINGWALL, TAIN and FORTROSE; the two former, with the town of Cromarty, join with Kirkwall, Wick and Dornoch in returning a member to parliament, and the SHIRES of Ross and Cromarty unite in sending another to the imperial legislature. The burgh of Fortrose is associated with Inverness, Nairn and Forres in parliamentary representation.

CROMARTYSHIRE.

This county is so amalgamated with and intersected by Ross-shire, that, as is observed by respectable authorities, 'there can hardly be a literary separation of the two, as there should certainly not be a political.' The greater part of it lies in the 'Black Isle,' or that peninsula which is bounded by the Frith of Cromarty on the north and the Moray Frith on the south and east. The length of the district is about sixteen miles, and its average breadth between six and seven; it is computed that the superficies of land in the county amounts altogether to about three hundred and forty square miles. Cromarty is mentioned, in the fifth parliament of James V, in the year 1537, as a separate county; and the same distinction is observed in subsequent legislative acts that apply to the statistical divisions of the country; yet it has still been included in the shrievalty of Ross; and at this time the sheriff-substitute holds a monthly court at Cromarty (the only town in the shire), from which the county has received its distinctive recognized title.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—Originally, and at not a distant period, the greater part of this district presented a moorish unprofitable surface; but in recent times agricultural improvements, extensively pursued with persevering industry and skill, have materially changed its features: the soil has been rendered generally productive—planting has been introduced, and is gradually progressing. The CLIMATE is drier, the air more genial, than in the further northern and more western Highland tracts; the culture of the land has contributed to the amelioration of the temperature of Cromartyshire, and its crops are in most seasons earlier than in many of the adjacent districts. Its mineral treasure is but scanty—freestone and granite comprise the only descriptions worthy of notice. The fisheries on the coast are the most productive sources of the public profit and prosperity.

Note.—(a) Kincardine parish is partly in Inverness-shire, but the whole is entered here.
 (b) No returns were made for Resolis parish in 1801: the population must therefore be deducted from the column for 1831.
 (c) Urquhart parish is partly in Nairnshire; the entire contains 2,864 inhabitants.
 (d) A small portion of Urray parish is in Inverness-shire; the whole parish contains 2,768 inhabitants.

The total annual value of Real Property in these counties, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £121,557.

CROMARTY

Is a burgh of barony, and the capital of the parish and county of its name; 19½ miles N.E. of Inverness, 17 N.W. of Nairn, 11 S. of Tain, 8 N. by E. of Fortrose, and the like distance W. by N. of Invergordon; situate upon a promontory jutting into the neck of the sea connecting the Moray with the Cromarty firth, and at a short distance from the entrance into a harbour esteemed one of the safest and most capacious in North Britain; in this haven vessels of five hundred tons may ride in perfect security. The entrance from the sea lies between two wooded headlands, called the 'Sutors of Cromarty,' which almost meet and reflect each other's form—producing an effect, in combination with the general scenery, eminently picturesque. The view from the hill of Cromarty is truly delightful, and is the admiration of every visiter. Beneath the south Sutor is a profound chasm, called 'Macfarquhar's Bed,' and a petrifying spring, called the 'Dripping Well,' both attractive natural curiosities, never overlooked by the investigating stranger or tourist. Near the north Sutor are seven sunken rocks, termed the 'Seven King's Sons,' so named from the circumstance (according to tradition) of seven individuals, who bore that relation to royalty, having been shipwrecked upon them and drowned in returning from France. The town of Cromarty is one of the neatest and cleanest places of its size in Scotland; of late years it has received considerable and obvious improvements, and is rapidly increasing in extent, population and importance. Some few years since a fine commodious quay was constructed, at the joint expense of government and the proprietor of the Cromarty estate. The herring fishery is prosecuted in this quarter with persevering industry and general success: in the season of 1835, the produce of this branch of marine pursuit amounted to 6,140 barrels, and, in 1836, to 8,200; of this last number, 4,000 were exported to foreign countries, and the remainder (with the exception of the local consumption) to the London and various home markets. A manufactory of hempen cloth has been long carried on to some extent; and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, established here, facilitates the trading and mercantile transactions. Cromarty was anciently a royal burgh, but was disfranchised by an act of the Scottish privy council, in compliance with the solicitations of Sir John Urquhart, proprietor of the estate of Cromarty; it now, however, holds the rank stated at the commencement of this brief description, and joins with Kirkwall, Wick, Dornoch, Tain and Dingwall in returning a member to parliament.

The church, an ancient building, stands at the east end of the town; there is also another on the south side, in which the service is performed in Gaelic. A fair is held on the third Tuesday of November, o. s.

DINGWALL,

STRATHPEFFER, MARYBOROUGH, CONAN BRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DINGWALL is a royal burgh, and capital of the parish of its name, in the eastern part of Ross-shire; 178 miles N. N. W. of Edinburgh, 23 N. W. of Inverness, 20 S. W. of Cromarty, 14 S. W. of Invergordon, and 10 N. of Beaul; pleasantly situate on a fertile plain, near the western extremity of the beautiful frith of Cromarty, which is navigable at high water, for light craft, as far as the town. It is supposed that at some remote period Dingwall was much more extensive than it now is, as causeways and foundations of buildings have been found some hundreds of yards from the site of the present town. As it now exists, Dingwall is neat and well built, and consists of one main street, well paved, and a few smaller ones; it is copiously supplied with excellent water from springs above the town, into which it is conveyed by means of pipes. The town-house, near the centre of the burgh, is a curious old building, with a spire and clock; and the church is a plain structure, on the north side of the town. In the neighbourhood of the latter edifice is an obelisk, fifty-seven feet in height, erected to the memory of George, first Earl of Cromarty, who, eccentric at death as in life, in accordance with his last injunctions was buried here. Near the town formerly stood the mansion of the powerful and noble family of Ross; a rude fragment, in the garden attached to a villa, is now all that remains of that once princely domicile. Dingwall was erected a royal burgh by Alexander II, and its charter was renewed by James IV; it is governed by a provost, a dean of guild, a treasurer and ten councillors, and joins with Cromarty, and other burghs before specified, in returning a member to parliament. The town is eligibly situated for the purposes of a more extensive trade than it at present enjoys; its business is chiefly of a local character, manufactures not having as yet found a seat among this respectable community. In the High-street of the town are two very excellent inns, the 'Royal Hotel' and 'Caledonian'; they are both comfortable commercial as well as posting-houses. In the same street a branch of the National Bank of Scotland has been for some time established, and at the west end is one of the Aberdeen Town and County Bank.

Dingwall is surrounded by some of the most beautiful scenery in Scotland. The valley of Strathpeffer recedes to the westward, and is as lovely as any Lowland vale; while the mountains at its head present all the rude grandeur of the Highlands. The hill on the north side of the town, a beautiful woody declivity, will remind the traveller of the celebrated hill of Kin-noull, near Perth. About a mile and a half from Dingwall, on the road to Beauly, is the small village of MARYBOROUGH, seated on the left bank of the Conan, on the opposite side of which river is CONAN BRIDGE, another little village. The weekly market of Dingwall is held on Friday; and the annual fairs take place on the first Tuesday in July (old style), and the Tuesday immediately preceding old Christmas-day.

The mineral wells of STRATHPEFFER, situate at the upper extremity of a fertile valley of that name, which stretches about three miles due west from Dingwall, have occasioned the erection of some twenty or thirty neat villas or cottages around them, for the accommodation of their invalid visitors: two excellent hotels have recently been added, and (chiefly by the exertions of Captain J. E. Gordon, late M. P. for Dundalk,) a large and convenient hospital, provided with a medical attendant and nurses, has also just been finished, for the reception of the sick poor, who flock thither from all parts of the Highlands; the small hamlet of Auch-ternead, about two miles distant from the pump-room (or public lounge) attached to the principal well, and many of the adjacent farm-houses, likewise furnish lodgings to strangers when their influx is great, as it generally is during the months of June, July and August. The situation of these wells is romantic—the neighbouring country fertile, and exceedingly beautiful. The springs seem to rise through the porous red sandstone which is prevalent in this district, and at no great distance from the lofty mountain, Ben Wyvis, one of the most conspicuous eminences in the north of Scotland: the waters have long been known as medicinal, and an analysis of their composition (rather imperfect) was published by Mr. Donald Monro in the philosophical transactions for 1772; they were brought into considerable celebrity by Dr. Morrison, an Aberdeenshire gentleman, who was an enthusiast for their salutary virtues, affirming them to be the strongest and most salubrious in Great Britain; they have subsequently been visited by various scientific individuals, particularly by Dr. T. Thomson in May, 1828, who analyzed the waters with the most scrupulous exactness.

Strathpeffer is bounded on the north by a high sandstone ridge, and on the south it is skirted by the steep, green, wooded acclivities of Knock-Farrel, one of the most extensive and strongly vivified ferts (or ancient beacon hills) in the country. The public road through the valley passes along the property, almost exclusively, of Mr. Hay Mackenzie, of Cromarty, and bounds the grounds of the ancient seat of that gentleman's family, Castle Leod, a castellated mansion, still inhabited; the same road, on quitting the strath, runs by the romantic and beautifully wooded knolls of Coul, the property of Sir George S. Mackenzie, Bart. and the manse, village and island plain of Contin; beyond which the visiter of this district may either wander along the picturesque shores of Loch Echiltie, and the sheep-walks of Comrie, to the cascades of the Conan—or, holding more to the north, he will be delighted with the falls of Rogie, on the Blackwater, which flows from the upland lake and moors of Strathgarve. Nearer to the mineral spa, he may likewise be gratified by a walk through the lawns and pleasure-grounds of Brahn Castle, the ancient and princely residence of the Seaforth family; this beautiful seat is situate below the southern slope of Knock-Farrel, and commands an extensive, magnificent and pleasingly varied prospect, comprehending the partially wooded and cultivated courses of the rivers Conan and Orrin.

FORTROSE, ROSEMARKIE & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FORTROSE is a small town and representative burgh, in the parish of Rosemarkie; 21 miles s. of Tain, 18 N.E. of Beauly, and 10 N. of Inverness; situate on the north side of the inner part of the Moray Frith, nearly opposite Fort George, from which it is distant two miles and a half. Before the abolition of episcopal establishments in Scotland, Fortrose cathedral was that of the bishopric of Ross, and this town was likewise the chief seat of learning in this quarter of the kingdom; it was mentioned in history by the title of the 'Channoury of Ross.' James II, in 1444, united the town in burghal privileges with the neighbouring village of Rosemarkie, under the name of Fort-Ross, which has since been softened down into Fortrose. But small portions of the ancient cathedral now remain entire; one part of it is used as a court-house and prison, and another division as a burial-place. Rosemarkie is comparatively a meaner place than Fortrose, though in point of antiquity it takes precedence as being the parish town. The trade of shoemaking is the most prominent branch of business in Fortrose, while in Rosemarkie weaving is the chief occupation. Between the former place and Fort George there is a regular ferry, and the town has an excellent harbor, erected by parliamentary commissioners, which is frequented by the London, Leith, Aberdeen and Dundee traders.

Fortrose is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild and nine councillors; and the burgh joins with Inverness, Forres and Nairn in sending a member to parliament.

The parish church, which is at ROSEMARKIE, is a modern erection, having been completed in 1821; it is in the late Gothic style, and considered to be a handsome well-finished building; the situation of the edifice has been happily selected, and its commanding aspect on the coast uniformly attracts the particular notice of strangers. It is intended to erect a church at Fortrose by subscription, a fund having been left as a stipend for the future minister. The parish of Rosemarkie extends six miles in length, by three in breadth. Its situation is fine and pleasant; the hills both on the north and south are, for the most part, arable, being in summer covered with verdure, and producing early and abundant crops. The coast all along between Rosemarkie and Cromarty is bold and rocky; it abounds with romantic views and frightful precipices. As the country lies dry and has the benefit of fine sea breezes, the air is pure and salubrious. A weekly market is held at Fortrose on Friday, and there are three annual fairs, namely, on the first Wednesday of April, the third Wednesday of June, and the second Wednesday of November.

INVERGORDON, ROSSKEEN, ALNESS, EVANTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

INVERGORDON is a thriving sea-port village, in the parish of Rosskeen and county of Ross; 12 miles s. s. w. of Tain, 13 n. n. e. of Dingwall, and 8 w. by N. of Cromarty; most elegantly seated on the north side of the fine bay of Cromarty, from whence there is a regular ferry to the opposite shore of the frith: for the accommodation of persons crossing, a small pier was erected in 1821, partly at the expense of the county and partly with the assistance of government, so that boats can now land their passengers at any time of the tide; but the most valuable and important improvement conferred upon the port has been effected through the munificence and public spirit of the proprietor, R. M'Leod, of Cadboll, Esq., M. P., who at his own expense constructed an excellent harbour in 1828, from the central situation of which all goods for the eastern and western parts of Ross-shire, as well as for most districts of Sutherlandshire, are at present unshipped here; and, since the weekly arrival and departure of the London and Leith steam-vessels at the port, a considerable trade has been created in the exportation of cattle. The manufacture of hemp, which is carried on in the town by two establishments, furnish employment to a portion of the inhabitants. Few places possess greater attraction or facilities for sea-bathing than Invergordon: this circumstance, together with the general salubrity of the climate, the comparatively short distance to the Strathpeffer mineral wells, now of so much celebrity (described at page 736), and its lately formed accommodations as a port, have combined to raise this once insignificant village into a station of consequence enjoyed by few places of its size. The 'M'Leods' Arms, an excellent inn, situate in Main-street, is also a posting-house. A justice of peace court is held on the first Wednesday in every month. A subscription library was established in 1835, and there is a friendly society for the relief of the sick. Near the ferry is Invergordon Castle, where are some fine plantations. In November, 1801, the centre of the edifice was accidentally destroyed by fire; and that part has remained in a ruinous state since the unfortunate occurrence; the left wing of the building is the portion at present occupied by the family. The parish of Rosskeen extends six miles along the Frith of Cromarty, and ten inland. The parish of Alness lies on the west, and Logie Easter on the east. The lower part of the parish, which extends along the Frith, and for about two miles back, lies in a gentle and easy ascent towards the first hills. A hill called Knock-Navie or Cold hill, divides the lower from the Highland part of the parish. Beyond the upper arable ground and inhabited glens, there is a very considerable range of mountains, applicable to no other purpose than that of pasturing black cattle or sheep. Like the adjacent parts of the shire, the parish has been greatly improved in agricultural capabilities, and now possesses some fine plantations, the chief of these being at Invergordon castle, above noticed. There are five annual fairs at Invergordon; they are held on the third Tuesday of February (n. s.), the second Tuesday of April (o. s.), the first Tuesday of August and second Tuesday of October (n. s.), and the second Tuesday of December (o. s.). The population of Invergordon is about 1,000.

ALNESS is a small village, partly in the parish of its name and partly in that of Rosskeen, three miles from Invergordon; situate on both sides of the Alness (which river separates the two parishes); and on the north side of Cromarty bay; the church is about half a mile from the village. Three fairs are held here annually, viz., on the second Tuesday of January, the last Tuesday of October, and the third Tuesday of November: besides which, a monthly cattle-market is held from April to November, both inclusive; the days of holding these markets, like those at Beaulieu (which see), are regulated by the Falkirk trysts.

EVANTON is a rural village, about seven miles from Invergordon and four from Alness; situate, like the two latter places, on the north side of Cromarty bay, and sheltered by a row of trees, which defend it from the sea-breeze. The church is about a mile distant, and there is a handsome chapel in the village for a congregation of seceders. About two miles to the westward is Foulis ferry, used for loading grain, timber and cattle; and a mile north-east of the village is a deep ravine, called 'Auitgraade,' supposed to have been formed, at some very early period, by a mighty convulsion of nature. There are two fairs annually held at Evanton, on the second Tuesday of June and the second Tuesday of December, both new style.

POOLEWE

IS a small hamlet in the parish of the same name, in the county of Ross; 60 miles w. by n. from Dingwall, and 45 s. e. from Stornoway; situate at the head of a fine bay called Loch Ewe, and about two miles from Loch Marce, which abounds with fish. This lake contains twenty-four islands; some of these are but little raised above the water, and are covered with scattered firs, and with thickets of birch, alder and holly; while they are separated by narrow sinuous channels. The northern margin of the loch presents a variety of close shore scenery, consisting of rocky and wooded bays and creeks, crowned by noble overhanging cliffs and mountains; in one place the remains of a fir forest, in a situation almost incredible, produces a style of landscape that might be expected among the Alps, but not within the more confined scope and lower arrangements of Scottish mountains. The lake is eighteen miles in length by from three to four broad; one of the islands is called Maree, from which the water takes its name; tradition says that some noble personages from Norway were buried here. Mr. Macculloch, after describing this beautiful lake, adds—'I ought not to forget, before quitting Loch Maree, what is interesting as a point of natural history, namely, the existence of the grey eagle in this place, because it is not known anywhere else in Scotland. There was a pair in Pennant's time, and there is a pair still, one of which I (Mr. Macculloch) had the good fortune to see; it is a long-lived bird, and it is not unlikely that these are the same individuals.' Loch Maree is the property of Sir Francis M'Kenzie, of Gairloch, of whom permission must be obtained to fish in it. Into the inner part of Loch Ewe (or Ew, or Eu) pours the river Ewe, which is scarcely two miles in length, and is the natural outlet from Loch Marce; the river has a rapid turbulent course, and is noted for the abundance of its salmon.

Poolewe until lately formed a portion of the parish of Gairloch, when it was erected into a separate parochial district. At present it does not possess a parish school; but the Society for propagating Christian Knowledge have established several schools in various places throughout the parish.

STORNOWAY

Is a town in the parish of its name, in the island of Lewis and county of Ross; 65 miles N. of Portree, in the isle of Skye, and 46 from Poolewe (described in a preceding page). It is situate in north latitude 58° 7', and in west longitude 6° 14' 10", at the head of a fine bay, called Loch Stornoway, considered one of the safest and most commodious harbours in North or even Great Britain; the entrance to it is north and north-by-west, and is easy of access to vessels of any burthen, at any time of the tide. A light-house stands on Arinsh point, on the south side of the harbour, erected by the proprietor, the Right Hon. James Alex. Stewart Mackenzie, of Seaforth, governor of Ceylon; but as it was thought by the Trinity Board that its light might be mistaken for another in that quarter, the erection at Stornoway has never been illuminated; it, however, is not useless, as it serves as an excellent and conspicuous landmark for vessels. The harbour is built round the bay, in form of an amphitheatre, and the streets run in direct lines; the houses are neat and well built, and, being in general whitewashed, have a clean appearance. A most convenient quay, with slips and landing-places, has been constructed by public subscription. The town, as viewed on entering the bay, presents a pleasing and rather imposing aspect. From small origin, Stornoway has risen to considerable size, by the exertions and patronage of the noble family of Seaforth, combined with the public spirit and enterprise of the inhabitants. Here the white fishery, consisting of cod, ling and herrings, has been long and successfully carried on; besides which the salmon fishery is very productive. Last year (1836,) there were four hundred and fifty-nine boats employed, the complement of hands to each being six men; during that season there were four hundred and thirty tons of fish exported, consisting chiefly of cod and ling. We may in this place be allowed to relate a fact, which, though at the time deemed interesting merely as a singular occurrence, involves considerations worthy of being entertained in a more important light, as creating, possibly at no distant period, another branch of marine pursuit, upon our own shores, that has hitherto been followed only in more distant seas, accompanied by extreme perils and privations—we allude to the whale fishery. On the morning of the 4th of July of this year (1837), a shoal of several hundreds of whales, of the bottle-nose species, came into the bay of Stornoway; the greatest bustle and activity was immediately manifested amongst the inhabitants—chase was instantly commenced upon these unusual visitors, and, after an arduous and severe contest, twenty-eight of these Leviathans of the deep were driven on shore. The writer of this article witnessed the opening of one of these enormous fish; in the paunch were found the remains of nine fine salmon, two of which, when alive, could not have weighed less than twenty pounds each, and they exhibited every appearance of having been swallowed whole. If we except two rope-works, a distillery and a corn-mill, Stornoway derives no prosperity from manufactures: its general trade and commerce is facilitated by the National Bank of Scotland, which has a branch establishment settled in this distant quarter of the kingdom; there are likewise agents for Lloyd's, and one for the North British Fire Office, in this place. The parish of Stornoway lies on the north-east of Lewis Island, bounded on the inland side by Barvas—it extends nineteen miles in length, by from seven to four in breadth. The surface is generally flat and moorish; the shores partly sandy and partly rocky, and are indented by a number of bays.

Stornoway was erected into a burgh of barony by James VI, with the design of promoting the civilization of the Western Isles; it is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors. A sheriff's court sits every Thursday; and a justice of peace, commissary and baron baillie courts are held as occasion may require. This place possesses several educational, religious and social institutions. The parochial school is a very efficient establishment, conducted upon the plan of the Glasgow normal seminaries; there are, also, a school for females, one founded by the Society for propagating Christian Knowledge, and a sabbath evening school. The friendly society and incorporated trades' society (associations for the support of the aged and the infirm) are liberally sustained by their respective benevolent members. The edifice erected here for the service of a masonic lodge is a handsome structure; in it are occasionally held assemblies, concerts and public meetings; in the same building is a news-room and a public library. A cattle trust is held about a mile from the town on the second Wednesday of July. The town of Stornoway contains 496 houses; and the population, in this year (1837), amounts to 2,660 inhabitants.

As there is no regular direct communication with Stornoway, the most certain route by which to arrive there is to start from Edinburgh or Glasgow to Inverness; from thence to Dingwall; then, by the mail-car, to Loch Maree; from whence there is a boat to Poolewe, between which latter place and Stornoway a regular packet sails twice a week. Or the traveller may take the steam-packet from Glasgow to Portree (in Skye), at which place a boat may be hired to go to Poolewe, or one may without difficulty be engaged to proceed direct from Portree to Stornoway.

POST OFFICE, Cromwell-street, John Macanley, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (weather permitting) every Monday and Friday, and are despatched every Wednesday and Saturday.

TAIN

IS a market town and royal burgh, the county town of Ross-shire and capital of the parish of its name; 46 miles N. of Inverness, and 26 N. by E. of Dingwall; occupying a gentle acclivity, about a mile from the frith of Tain, across which arm of the sea are several ferries, and near its head it is crossed by an iron bridge. A rich agricultural district surrounds the town, which is old and irregularly built, but of late years has been improved by the erection of many houses of handsome appearance, particularly towards the east. Among the public buildings the most prominent and ornamental are—a large modern edifice for assemblies and public meetings; the new academy; and a church, built a few years ago, of considerable dimensions, of quadrangular form, having a castellated tower at each corner, which not rising above the main body of the building, the general appearance of the structure is more massive than elegant. The town-hall, previous to 1833, was used as a place of confinement for debtors; on the 13th April, in that year, it was nearly totally destroyed by fire, and now remains in ruins; upon this occasion three persons were burnt to death. The ancient Gaelic name of the town is Balduei, signifying 'the town of St. Duthac' (or Duthus), to whom the old church and chapel in the parish had been dedicated; the church, which was founded by Thomas, Bishop of Ross, in 1481, and was an elegant structure, is now in a state of melancholy dilapidation. St. Duthac seems to have been a saint who enjoyed a considerable reputation in Scotland, in the fifteenth century, as tradition records that James IV once made a pilgrimage on foot from Falkland, in Fife, to his shrine at the church of Tain, for the expiation of some offence. He travelled with unusual expedition, resting only a short time by the way, at the monastery of Plusecardine.

There is no particular manufacture carried on in Tain, and its trade is chiefly confined to that necessary for domestic purposes. There are two principal inns in the High-street, one of which, the 'Hotel,' is a comfortable commercial house and an efficient posting establishment. Though seated almost on the shore of an arm of the sea, Tain is not a shipping port, on account of the difficulty of navigating the frith, at the entrance to which there is on each side a bank of quicksands, named 'Gizzen Briggs,' leaving scarcely room sufficient in the channel for a moderately sized vessel to pass through at high water. As a royal burgh, it is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and nine councillors; and unites with Cromarty and other contributory burghs (named under that town) in returning a member to parliament. The parish of Tain extends eight miles along the south shore of the Dornoch Frith, by a breadth of two miles inland. The ground in general is flat, but towards the west, rather hilly. The district is tolerably well wooded, much improved by agricultural operations, and, upon the whole, of pleasing appearance. The sea shore is flat and sandy. The markets at Tain are held on Tuesday and Friday; and the fairs, of which there are six, on the first Tuesday of January, the third Tuesday of March, the second Wednesday of July, the third Wednesday of August, the third Tuesday of October, and the Tuesday preceding Christmas-day.

ROXBURGHSHIRE.

THIS county, which lies on the south-eastern border of Scotland, is bounded by Northumberland on the east, Dumfries-shire on the south-west, by the county of Selkirk on the west, by Berwickshire on the north, and by Northumberland and part of Cumberland on the south. The figure of the county is extremely irregular: it measures, from its extreme apex on the south to that part which is inserted between the counties of Berwick and Edinburgh, upwards of forty miles; and from east to west, near the centre, about thirty miles. The area of the shire has been variously estimated as containing 672, 696, and 715 square miles of land; rather less than one-half is brought into cultivation. The county is divided by its waters into several districts, of which the chief is Tiviotdale, being that division drained by the Tiviot and its tributary streams. Liddisdale, which forms the south-west corner of the county, comprehends the alpine territory, which is drained by the Liddle and its tributaries. The third division lies between the Gala and Leader streams; and the fourth, which is situate north of the Tweed, is included in 'the Merse.' At the time of the Christian epoch the western and greater part of Roxburghshire was inhabited by the Gadenii, while the eastern and lesser districts were occupied by the Othadini, who had numerous strong holds in the shire—ruins and traces of which are still visible; the district is also intersected by Roman roads in various directions, and the whole shire presents a field of the greatest interest to the antiquary and the historian. There is another class of antiquities (the memorials of after ages) belonging to the county, worthy of notice and inspection—these are towers or castles; among them are the castle of Jedburgh, that of Roxburgh, Hermitage castle (in Liddisdale), and other similar structures of minor celebrity. The district was likewise famed for its religious edifices, which included the abbeys of Jedburgh, Melrose, and Kelso. From its situation on the confines of the two kingdoms, Roxburghshire suffered severely throughout the various border wars; few were so distinguished in the conflicts of the middle ages as the 'men of Tiviotdale,' many of whom followed David, in 1128, to 'the Battle of the Standard,' in which they fought by his side, and shared his misfortune. During these fierce aggressions, the marches of the kingdom were at different periods contracted and extended (this district being occasionally wholly or partly under English domination), till the year 1357, when the borders were finally settled as they then happened to lie; and by this arrangement Roxburghshire was for ever attached to Scotland.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The southern parts of Roxburghshire are very mountainous, and throughout the whole territory there is little land absolutely flat; in many instances, however, the hilly grounds rise in beautiful swells from the rich valleys at their base: the aspect of the country is thus finely diversified in respect to surface and elevation, while the beauty of the district is greatly enhanced by the clear rivers and brooks poured through the different vales. The soil of the county is various, and much of it exceedingly fertile: in some parts a rich loam prevails—in others, gravel and clay, in various proportions; the heavy clayey soil chiefly occupying the higher grounds, while the valued loam is generally found on low and level tracts, near the beds of rivers and rivulets. In Liddisdale there is much mossy land; but, for a country so mountainous, the proportion of heath and moss is inconsiderable. It has been ascertained that, so early as the twelfth century, the district produced great quantities of corn; and the amount of barley then ground at the mills exhibited the progress in the manufacture of grain. Under the intelligent monks, the agriculture of the county is known to have arrived at considerable perfection; and it is matter of certainty that they introduced a knowledge of horticulture. In later times, Roxburghshire has kept pace with the other counties in those extraordinary improvements in the management of the soil, and in the rearing of stock, for which Scotland in general is now distinguished. The MINERALOGY of the shire is neither valuable or varied. Between the years 1760 and 1770, coal was discovered in the hill called Carter Fell, in this county, near the border of Northumberland; but, though wrought for some time, was ultimately abandoned as unprofitable: another seam was subsequently found near the south-eastern point of Liddisdale, from which little benefit has been derived beyond that detached district; various attempts have been made to discover coal in different places in the county, but not one of them was conducted on a scale adequate to the importance of the object: the inhabitants are still supplied with this valuable fossil from Dumfries-shire, Lothian or Northumberland. The MANUFACTURES of Roxburghshire are not extensive: if a staple of the county may be particularised, it is that of articles manufactured from wool, the seats of which are at Hawick, where flannels, blankets, woollen cloth, lambs' wool yarn and hosiery are manufactured; at Jedburgh, which furnishes woollens, hosiery and some linens; and at Kelso, producing woollens and linens. The county contains many elegant mansions and beautiful seats: one of the most interesting of these is 'Abbotsford,' the seat of the late eminent novelist, Sir Walter Scott; it is a fine Gothic castle, the internal and external decorations of which characterize it as having been the residence of the poet, the antiquary, and the man of superior and refined taste: but not to the mansion was the cultivated taste and judgment of the poet confined—he covered his extensive property with the most skillfully disposed and thriving plantations, and by his improvements induced others to contribute to ornament that beautiful portion of the valley of the Tweed.

RIVERS and MOUNTAINS.—The principal streams of Roxburghshire are beautiful and interesting, and their tributaries numerous. The noble TWEED enters the county near the influx of the Etrick, winds through the fertile plains of Melrose and Kelso, and, in a course of thirty miles, receives the Gala, the Allan, the Leader, the Tiviot and the Eden. The TIVIO, which falls into the Tweed nearly opposite to Kelso, is a lovely river; it passes through a vale to which it gives name, and, in a course of from thirty to forty miles, receives the Borthwick, the Ale, the Slitterick, the Rule, the Jed, the Oxnam and the Kaile waters, with many subsidiary streamlets. The LIDDAL (or Liddle) rises in and runs through the parish of Castletown; it gives the name of Liddisdale to a division of the county, and for a distance of four or five miles forms the boundary with England: the streams tributary to the Liddel are the Hermitage, the Tweeden, the Tennis, the Kershope and the Blackburn. The TYNE and COQUET rivers have their origin in this county; after which they enter England, and fall into the sea at Tynemouth and Coquet Isle. The following are the principal MOUNTAINS and eminences, with their respective altitudes above the level of the sea:—Cheviot, 2,682 feet; Chill Hill, Millenwood Fells, and Windhead Fell, each 2,000; Tudhope Fell, 1,830; Carter Fell, 1,602; Meggs Hills, 1,480; Ruberlaw, 1,419; Eildon Hills, 1,330; Dunnian, 1,021; Minto Hills, 858; and Minto Craigs, 649.

The county of Roxburgh comprises thirty entire parishes, and five parts of parishes: it contains only one Royal Burgh—namely, JEDBURGH—which, in connexion with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Lauder, returns a member to parliament; and the COUNTY sends another representative.

ANCRUM AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

ANCRUM is a small village in the united parish of Ancrum and Langnewton, 12 miles w. of Kelso, 11 E. of Hawick, and 3 N. of Jedburgh; pleasantly situate on the right bank of the water of Ale, about a mile above its junction with the Tiviot. Ancrum House, the residence of Sir William Scott, stands in a delightful position, and commands some beautifully picturesque prospects; the trees in the park are considered the oldest and finest in this part of the country. At a short distance east of the village stood Ancrum Castle; opposite to which, in the face of a perpendicular rock, are some caves, supposed to have been places of retreat in the troubles of former ages. In the early part of last century the banks of the Tiviot and Ale, at this spot, were the favourite haunt of Thomson, the poet of 'The Seasons'; one of the caves just mentioned is still pointed out, to which, it is said, he frequently retired to indulge his reveries, and on that account is called 'Thomson's Cave;' his name is carved on the roof, by (it is supposed) his own hand. Dr. Buchan, the celebrated author of the 'Domestic Medicine' and other medical works, was born in this village. The parish stretches six miles along the north side of the river Tiviot, and its breadth is about four miles; a part of the Roman road that led from York to the banks of the Forth passes through the north corner of the parish, and the remains of a Roman encampment are likewise sufficiently discernible.

DENHOLM

IS a small village in the parish of Cavers, five miles from Jedburgh, and the like distance from Hawick, pleasantly situate on a rivulet tributary to the Tiviot. The chief proportion of the inhabitants are stocking weavers, and others are engaged in rural affairs. The parish contains a chapel for independent and a parochial school. The parish of Cavers is large and of irregular form, being twenty miles in extent from north to south, and from two to seven in breadth. The upper part of the district is hilly and pastoral, while the lower, which is in a fine state of cultivation, declines into rich arable fields.

POST OFFICE, Jane Turnbull, Post Mistress.—Letters from HAWICK and the South-West arrive every morning at half-past ten, and are despatched every day at twelve.—Letters from JEDBURGH arrive every day at twelve, and are despatched every morning at half-past ten.

HAWICK,

INCLUDING THE NOBILITY, GENTRY AND CLERGY IN THE PARISHES OF CAVERS, HOBKIRK, KIRKTOWN, MINTO, ROBERTON AND WILTON.

HAWICK is a thriving manufacturing town and free burgh of regality, in the parish of its name; 50 miles s. by E. of Edinburgh, 20 s. w. of Kelso, 11 s. of Selkirk, and 45 n. of Carlisle; situate on the high road between the last-named city and the metropolis of Scotland, at the confluence of the Slitterick with the Tiviot; by the former river the town is divided into nearly two equal parts, which are connected by two stone bridges, one of which bears the marks of great antiquity. From its approximate position to the border of the two kingdoms, Hawick generally suffered severely from the incursions of the English, and was more than once burnt; one of its most destructive conflagrations occurred in 1570, when it was set fire to by the English under Lord Sussex. The present town consists chiefly of one long spacious street on the right bank of the Tiviot, with some other thoroughfares of inferior grade. The part on the west side is more irregular, and the houses not so good; but the entire is well paved, lighted with gas, and plentifully supplied with excellent spring water, which is conveyed through leaden pipes to the town. In the High-street stands the town-house, in which the burgh and justice of peace courts are held. The environs of Hawick are much admired by strangers; but the improvement of the neighbourhood is much retarded by the territory being held under strict entail, which prevents gentlemen of fortune from settling in this part of the country and embellishing its natural loveliness. The banks of the Tiviot are extremely picturesque and delightful, and the approach to the town from the south can be scarcely surpassed for beauty: the extensive nursery grounds, which are so celebrated throughout the kingdom, are in the immediate vicinity of the town, and materially heighten the general effect of the scenery; the grounds belong to the Messrs. Dickson, and were first established by members of the same family upwards of a century ago. To obviate the inconvenience which lately existed in the approach to the town from the north, a handsome new bridge has been constructed; and various other improvements, in this as well as different parts of the burgh, have been effected. The great increase of manufacturing establishments, together with the erection of extensive mills and the enlargement of others, have conduced to the increase of the population, and the consequent augmentation of buildings.

Hawick is a burgh of barony, independent of the lord of erection, and appears to have existed free from a very early period; but the documents of the burgh having been either lost or destroyed during the inroads of the English borderers, a charter was granted in the year 1545, by James Douglas Comes de Drumlanrig, confirming to the burgesses such rights and lands as they formerly possessed; and in the month of May of the same year this was confirmed by another charter, granted by Queen Mary: under these grants the burgesses annually elect their magistrates, consisting of two bailies, and two representatives of each of seven incorporated trades, who, with fifteen standing councillors (elected for life), manage all municipal affairs of the town. The burgh enjoys all the privileges of a royal one, except that of returning members to parliament. An annual ceremony, which, it is conjectured, was in-posed by one of the charters, still continues to be observed—it is called 'colour riding': the ceremony originated, according to tradition, from the circumstance of some young men of the town having surprised the English camp, during the night after the battle of Flodden-field, and possessed themselves of a colour belonging to the hostile army; this ensign is borne by an unmarried man of the burgh, elected for the occasion and dubbed with the title of 'cornet,' who accompanies the authorities in procession round the lands belonging to the town, of which a grant was made from the Laird of Drumlanrig, as a reward for the valour displayed in obtaining the standard. This perambulation, which takes place in the month of June, is succeeded by horse-racing and various national and local gymnastic exercises, to the fortunate competitors in which are awarded proportionate stakes and prizes.

Hawick is one of the most considerable manufacturing and trading towns in the south of Scotland. The weaving of stockings and the spinning of yarn (chiefly lambs' wool) are branches of great extent, about six hundred looms being employed in the former; and it was calculated, some few years since, that there were 900,000 pounds weight of wool spun into yarn, three-fifths of which was wrought up into hose, &c., and the remainder sold to manufacturers of stockings in Leicester, Derbyshire, Glasgow, &c. The manufacture of blankets, flannels, plaidings, and woollen cloths is also of material importance; in the tanning of leather and dressing of sheep-skins there are several houses engaged; and the making of whips and thongs is a branch of consequence here. The more domestic trade of the shops is very respectable, and altogether Hawick may be esteemed as a flourishing manufacturing town. Three banking agencies are settled here, namely, a branch of the British Linen Company's bank, one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and one of the National Bank of Scotland. The principal inn, called 'The Tower,' situate in Tower-knowe, was a fortress once belonging to the superior of the burgh, and the only building not consumed by the forces of Sussex; at a more recent period it was the frequent residence of the celebrated Anne, Dutchess of Buccleugh and Monmouth.

The edifices for the purposes of divine worship are the parish church, two meeting-houses of the united secession, one of the relief synod, one for independents, and one for the society of friends. The church is beautifully situated on a circular eminence in the centre of the town, and in approaching Hawick its tall square turret is a most conspicuous object. The establishment of several institutions evinces a taste for literary pursuits and useful knowledge; among these are two public and an equal number of circulating libraries; two public reading-rooms, liberally furnished with London and provincial papers; and a school of arts, of great utility in promoting the culture of the arts and sciences. A farmers' club, or agricultural society, was formed here in 1776; the members assemble regularly once a month, for the discussion of questions connected with agriculture. The town has a good grammar-school, and there are various private teachers and a respectable boarding academy. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and there are four annual fairs, viz., on the 17th of May, 17th of July, 21st of September, and 8th of November—(any of these days of the month happening on Saturday, Sunday or Monday, the fair is held on the following Tuesday); there is also a cattle tryst in October, at which immense numbers of black cattle are exposed for sale, in passing from Falkirk tryst to Carlisle and Newcastle fairs.

POST OFFICE, Silver-street, Miss Armstrong, Post Mistress.—The mail from London and the South arrives every morning at half-past nine, and is despatched every day at half-past twelve.—The mail from Edinburgh arrives every day at half-past twelve, and is despatched every morning at half-past nine.

JEDBURGH,

INCLUDING THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, CLERGY, &c. IN THE PARISHES OF BEDRULE, CRAILING, HOWNAM, OXNAM, AND SOUTHDEAN.

JEDBURGH is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the capital of the parish of its name, and the county town; 46 miles s. by E. of Edinburgh (by Lauder), 10 s. by w. of Kelso, the like distance n. by E. of Hawick, and 12 n. of the English border; agreeably situate on the left bank of the Jed—the name of which river, with worth (the Saxon term for hamlet), formed its ancient appellation of Jedworth or Jedworth: in course of time it has been perverted into its present designation; but through a very extensive district in the south the old name is partly retained by pronouncing it Jeddart or Jethart, which are almost exclusively used by the common people. The town, which stands on the declivity of a hill, and surrounded on every side by others of considerable height, is in general well built, and consists of four principal streets, which cross each other at right angles, and form a square or market-place in the centre. The streets and leading shops are lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water, brought to the town by leaden pipes. The river Jed, which takes its rise in Carter Hill, and runs along the south-east side of the town, is crossed by no fewer than seven bridges within a mile of it. The railway which is intended to be laid down between Newcastle-on-Tyne and Edinburgh (the survey for which has been already made,) will pass near this town and that of Galashiels. In recent times Jedburgh has been generally improved, and many handsome and spacious buildings have been erected. The principal architectural and antiquarian objects of attraction in the town are the cathedral and the abbey, which stand on a piece of ground betwixt the houses and the river. The cathedral, although for the most part in a ruinous condition, exhibits an outline of its original magnitude and magnificence: to preserve this venerable edifice from the total destruction towards which it was verging, it has within these few years received considerable repairs, which have been so judiciously conducted as not to interfere with or alter the original design of the structure. The abbey, which is of the Gothic order, was founded for canon regulars by David I; it is situate on the banks of the Jed, on the south side of the town: this extensive building ruins from east to west, and appears to have been originally three stories in height; the west end from the steeple, and south front, are mostly entire, but there is no roof on any part of it; in each of the first and second stories there are nine arches. Part of the west end is fitted up for the parish church; the steeple, which is still standing, is in tolerably good preservation—it is about one hundred and twenty feet in height. Among the other prominent public buildings of Jedburgh are the county gaol and bridewell, and the town-hall; the former is designated the 'castle,' from its occupying the site of the ancient fortress; it is a fine erection, in the castellated style, and its internal accommodations and arrangements are upon the most approved system. The appearance of this building is such as to disguise its real character as completely to the sight, as its name does to the ear. From its elevated situation it is seen at a considerable distance all round the town, and when on its summit a delightful view is obtained; executions have, however, from time immemorial, taken place on this eminence. The town-hall is an elegant and commodious edifice, founded in 1811 by the Marquess of Abercorn, with which nobleman also originated the dispensary.

Jedburgh is a burgh of very ancient erection, and, from a charter granted by William the Lion, appears to have been a place of note previous to the year 1165. It has the honour of parochial precedence, being the oldest parish in Scotland of which any historical record has been transmitted to posterity. Prior to the union it was a place of importance, and one of the principal towns in the south of Scotland. The burgh is governed by a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild and a treasurer, assisted by a select council of the principal burghesses. The lords of justiciary and lords commissioners of the jury court hold courts here for the south circuit (which includes the counties of Roxburgh, Berwick, Selkirk and Peebles,) generally in April and September; and a sheriff's court sits once a fortnight: the magistrates of Jedburgh hold a court every Saturday, and the justices of the peace for the Jedburgh district hold theirs on the first Tuesday of every month; the general quarter sessions of the peace for the county also take place here. The burgh joins with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Lauder, in returning a member to parliament. Of late years Jedburgh has advanced towards importance as a seat of manufactures: woollens, carpets, flannels, hosiery, are here produced to a considerable amount; also some linen goods; and in the neighbourhood are many corn-mills. Considerable emolument is derived from the sale of the produce of the orchards and gardens that surround the town—greater quantities of fruit being gathered here than in any other part of Scotland, Clydesdale excepted. A branch of the British Linen Company's bank has been settled here since 1791, and more recently there has been established an agency of the National Bank of Scotland; a savings' bank, opened in 1815, has been successfully sustained by the provident. The principal inn, which is also a posting-house, is the 'Spread Eagle,' situate in High-street.

Besides the parish church, there are three other places of worship, namely, two for the united secession body, and one for the relief synod. The grammar and English schools (the former under the patronage of

AND THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, CLERGY, &c. IN THE PARISHES OF EDNAM, MACKERSTON, ROXBURGH, SMILHOLM, SPROUSTON, AND STITCHEL.

KELSO, the largest town in the county, a burgh of barony, and the capital of the parish of its name, is 42 miles s. e. of Edinburgh, 10 n. of Jedburgh, 23 s. w. of Berwick-upon-Tweed, 60 n. by E. of Carlisle, and 6 w. of the English border; occupying an extensive plain on the north bank of the Tweed, opposite the confluence of the Tiviot with that river, and surrounded on all sides by a delightful amphitheatre of wood-clad hills. Kelso is of very great antiquity, and has been the scene of many memorable events in early history; its border situation subjected it to almost continual incursions of enemies, and to several conflagrations; to the latter infliction, however, it is indebted for the modern and uniform style which now characterizes its appearance. The town is built after the manner of the Flemish towns, having a spacious square in the centre, from which diverge four of the principal streets at equal distances. On the east side of the square stands an elegant town-house, erected in 1816, possessing, for the transaction of public business, a lofty and handsome hall, which is adorned with a fine portrait of the late Duke of Roxburgh; in this hall a justice of peace court sits on the first Friday of every month, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5., for petty offences, for settling disputes between masters and servants, &c.; the Duke of Roxburgh's bailie also holds a court in it every Saturday, to determine disputed debts not above forty shillings. The new bridge which crosses the Tweed consists of five large arches; it is extremely handsome—indeed, whether the elegance of the design or the solidity of the structure be considered, it is not surpassed by any similar work in the kingdom; it is well worthy of the stranger's notice, particularly as the view from it is most enchanting; and that from Chalkhaugh may rival the finest Italian landscape; these views comprehend Fleurs, the seat of the Duke of Roxburgh, the remains of Roxburgh Castle, Springwood Park, and the forks of the rivers; altogether the vicinage of Kelso has long and justly been admired for the loveliness of its scenery. On the south side of the town are the venerable remains of Kelso abbey, founded by David I, in 1128; during the repairs of this monument of ancient ecclesiastical magnificence, some few years ago, on removing the rubbish from the base of the structure, the fragment of a bell was found, which is supposed to have been, when perfect, about three feet in diameter, and one ton and a half in weight.

The government of the town (which was originally a burgh of regality) is vested in a baron bailie, appointed by the Duke of Roxburgh, assisted by fifteen stent masters or councillors, eight of whom are nominated by the Duke, and the others are elected annually by the different corporations; these have the power of levying a cess upon the inhabitants to defray the necessary expenses of the town, which, by the judicious regulations adopted, is one of the cleanest and most respectable upon the border: the town is lighted with gas, by a company formed for that purpose some years since. Though not ranking strictly as a manufacturing town, Kelso enjoys a considerable trade from being the chief seat of population in a wide agricultural district, which affords employment and support to a numerous body of the working classes. The principal branch is the dressing of lamb and sheep skins and the currying of leather; some years ago the number of skins dressed annually amounted to not less than 100,000. The woollen and linen manufacture also exists, but not to any great extent; the making of stockings is likewise a branch of some consequence; shoe-making is carried on upon a very large scale, supplying not only the town and neighbourhood, but also the different fairs and markets in the north of England. Kelso is rather noted for its cabinet and upholstery work, and the artisans, in this business here, are selected by the resident gentry within a wide circuit. Among the other prominent branches, iron-founding, and the manufacture of fishing-rods, lines, &c., may be mentioned. There are many corn-mills in the neighbourhood, and numerous gardens—the latter producing fruits and vegetables in great quantities, which are chiefly taken to Berwick for sale. The domestic trade of Kelso is well supported, and many of the shops are furnished with very extensive stocks of all kinds of goods necessary for the consumption of an inland district. The trading community of the town are aided in their transactions by the establishment of four banking-houses, namely, one each of the British Linen Company's bank, of the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland. The three principal inns are, the 'Cross Keys,' a good posting-house, in the Market-place; the 'Queen's Head,' a commercial inn, Bridge-st; and the 'White Swan,' Wood-market.

There are six places of worship in Kelso, exclusive of the established church; they comprise an episcopal chapel (a tasteful Gothic building), and chapels for an united secession body, a relief synod, original seceders, and reformed presbyterians. Among the several benevolent institutions supported by the inhabitants may be enumerated the dispensary, founded in 1777, which possesses hot and cold baths, and admits a limited number of patients into the establishment; the spinning society; a praiseworthy institution for the education of females, on the Lancasterian principle; a society for educating poor boys; a public grammar school, conducted by a rector and an assistant; and a parochial school. The literary institutions include several public libraries, and two news and reading rooms. There are two masonic lodges; an association entitled the Tweedside Physical and Antiquarian Society; an association composed of the noblemen and gentlemen residing in this quarter, styled the Bowmen of the Border, which was instituted in 1768 by a diploma from the Royal Company of Archers; a society for the suppression of mendicancy; two societies of gardeners, and several benefit associations. Two newspapers are published in Kelso, under the titles of the 'Kelso Mail' and the 'Kelso Chronicle;' the former is published on Mondays and Thursdays, the latter on Fridays. Kelso, which is at all times a place of gaiety and respectability, has an additional liveliness imparted to it by the occasional rendezvous of the Royal Caledonian Hunt, and by the horse-races which take place in the spring and autumn—the latter being superior to any meetings of the kind in Scotland; the course, which is much admired, is situate about a mile to the northward; on it is an excellent stand, on the model of that at Doncaster: these races never fail to attract great numbers of the fashionable and opulent classes from both sides of the border, and brilliant assemblies are at these seasons of frequent occurrence. A small and neat theatre is also occasionally open for scenic representations. A weekly market is held on Friday, one for cattle on the second Friday of each month, and horse markets on the four Fridays in March; the annual fairs take place on the second Friday of July, on the 5th of August, and the first Friday of November.

EDNAM (or Edenham) is a small village in the parish of its name, pleasantly situate on the small river Eden, about two miles and a half north-east of Kelso. It is celebrated as the birth-place of the poet Thomson, his father having been the clerical incumbent of the parish; a monument erected to the memory of the poet stands on an eminence near the village. The principal trade established in this place is an extensive brewery, the ale produced from which is in great repute and demand in the country around. The land of the parish ranks among the finest in this fertile district, and is beautifully cultivated and inclosed.

LESSUDDEN AND MAXTON.

LESSUDDEN is a small village in the parish of St. Boswell's, sometimes called Lessudden, 10 miles W. of Kelso, 7 N. of Jedburgh, and 5 E. of Melrose; situate nearly in the centre of the parish, at the east end of a spacious flat green. The hamlet of St. Boswell's, which now consists of little more than a public house or two, was at one time noted for one of the largest fairs (on the 17th July, for black cattle, horses, sheep and wool,) held in the county, or even in Scotland; 'St. Boswell's fair' was also the resort of many salesmen of various goods, and it is still much frequented by the direct descendants of the original gypsies (who so much annoyed the country in the fifteenth century) for the disposal of earthen, horn and tin ware: fallen off as this fair now is, its occurrence always presents a scene of great merriment in the pastoral district in which it takes place. The parish of St. Boswell's (or Lessudden) is three miles in length, by from one and a half to two in breadth; the land is beautifully inclosed, planted and cultivated. On the west rise the Eildon hills, and on the east and north the ground is undulating—the latter quarter ornamented by the fine woods of Dryburgh; beyond these rise some hills, which bound the prospect and proceed up Lauderdale. The parish of MAXTON, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, well inclosed and planted. On the estate of Littledean, about a mile from the church, are the remains of an old tower, once a strong fortification, and long the residence of the Kerrs, of Littledean. At Lilliard's Edge, on the boundary betwixt this parish and that of Anerum, was fought the famous battle between the Scots and English on the 14th of December, 1544, when the latter were totally routed with dreadful slaughter and the loss of a thousand men, slain and made prisoners.

LILLIESLEAF, BOWDEN AND MIDHOLM.

LILLIESLEAF is a village in the parish of its name, 10 miles from Galashiels, 8 from Jedburgh, 7 from Hawick, and 5½ from Selkirk, situate on a main road leading from east to west. The village is destitute of interest as respects manufactures, particular trade, or objects of curiosity. The parish, which is four miles in length by nearly three in breadth, is intersected by the Aie water; the lands are under good tillage, and the district has a pleasing appearance.

rose, standing in a low situation, through which a rivulet passes to the Tweed. The parish comprises a portion of the Eildon hills, from whence the land gently declines in well cultivated and inclosed fields. The vestiges of a Roman military road, with circular stations or encampments, may be traced in this district; and a ruin at Holydean, at an early period a very strong fortification, and the ancient residence of the now noble family of Roxburgh. There is in the parish, besides Bowden, the small village of MIDHOLM or Midiam.

BOWDEN village is two miles and a half from Mel-

MELROSE, GATTONSIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MELROSE is an ancient small town and free burgh of barony in the parish of its name; 36 miles s. by E. of Edinburgh, 12 N. W. of Jedburgh, 7 N. E. of Selkirk, and 4 s. E. of Galashiels; delightfully situate at the north side of a fertile vale, at the foot of the Eildon hills. It contains a number of new and handsome houses, while others exhibit proofs of great antiquity, presenting decorated stones, that once, undoubtedly, formed a portion of the superb abbey for which the place is so celebrated. The town is built in the form of a triangle, with small streets leading out at the corners; in the centre stands the cross, a structure supposed to be coeval with the abbey, and which bears all the marks of that great age. A wire bridge over the Tweed, for foot passengers, leads to the village of Gattonside, on the opposite bank of the river. The abbey of Melrose, one of the largest and most magnificent Gothic structures in the kingdom, stands a short distance from the town, on the south side of the Tweed: on viewing the exterior of this noble pile of building from the south, it has a most imposing effect; but on entering the interior, the lofty Gothic columns, in a double row, supporting the arched majestic roof—the elegance and variety of its sculpture, the multiplicity of its statues, the beauty of its stones and the symmetry of its parts, must strike every stranger with sublime awe and profound admiration. It was founded in 1136 by King David, who dedicated it to the Virgin Mary, and endowed it with extensive privileges and almost princely revenues; the monks were of the Cistercian order, and this monastery was the mother foundation of all establishments of that order in Scotland. It is somewhat remarkable that it is only within the limit of the present century that Melrose Abbey became an object of interest to the tourist; that interest was first awakened by the publication of the 'Lay of the last Minstrel,' a poem by Sir Walter Scott, whose description of this venerable time-recalling fabric induced the visits of strangers from all quarters. About two miles east from the town is the site of the still more ancient abbey of Melrose, founded in 664, and said to be the first abbey of the Culdees settled in this part of the kingdom; all that remains, however, of the old structure, is a small house, on a peninsula formed by the Tweed, whose banks around it are lofty and wooded, varied with perpendicular rocks jutting out into the river like buttresses: the situation is in the highest degree pleasant, commanding a fine view of the strath of Tweeddale. About a mile nearer the new town of Melrose is the village of NEWSTEAD, near which was another abbey, called the Red Abbey, until late years used as the parish church, when a new one was erected a little west of the town—the latter, a very beautiful edifice, with a handsome spire of considerable height: after the completion of the new church the abbey underwent some repairs, in the progress of which two stone coffins were discovered with human skeletons.

Previous to the abolition of hereditary jurisdictions Melrose was a burgh of regality; but it is now a free burgh of barony, and governed by a baron baillie chosen by the burgesses. A justice of peace court is held the first Saturday in every month. The only public building of the town, exclusive of the places of worship, is the gaol, a plain and small structure, erected within these few years, and substituted for a curious old one, of which no relic has been preserved except a stone bearing the arms of Melrose. The weekly market is on Saturday: and there are four annual fairs, which are held on the Thursday before Easter, for linseed; the first Wednesday of June, for cattle; the 12th of August, for lambs—(should that day fall upon Saturday, Sunday or Monday, the fair takes place on the Tuesday following); and the 22d of November, for cattle. The August fair is considered the largest for lambs in Scotland.

The antique and rural village of GATTONSIDE stands on the north bank of the Tweed, in the parish of Melrose, with which town a communication is maintained by means of the bridge, before-mentioned. The village is surrounded with orchards, and it is computed that a greater quantity of fruit is grown about this place than in any other part of the vale of Tweed.

NEW CASTLETON

Is a modern village, in an extensive mountainous parish, formerly known by the name of Castletown, but more generally by the popular title of Liddisdale, being the vale of the Liddle water. The village, which owes its rise to Henry Duke of Buccleugh, and has superseded the old parish village (a little further up the vale), is 26 miles s. of Jedburgh, 20 s.e. of Hawick, and 5 n.e. of Cannonby; situate in the centre of the lower and more arable part of the district, on the road which proceeds up Liddisdale. It consists principally of two long streets of neat new houses, which occupy a haugh on the right bank of the Liddle. The inhabitants are chiefly employed by the cotton manufacturers of Glasgow and Carlisle. The parish is upwards of eighteen miles in length by fourteen in breadth. The banks of the river are covered with natural wood and extensive plantations, which afford an infinite variety of the most picturesque scenery. Within the district are the ruins of no less than five churches, and many others of castles and fortified places; but the most remarkable object in Liddisdale is the ancient castle of Hermitage, erected in the thirteenth century by Comyn, Earl of Monteath, and was one of the largest fortresses on the border: it has lately been repaired by the Duke of Buccleugh, and during this operation several small pieces of cannon were found, and, among other antiquities, a gold ring, evidently of very old manufacture, bearing the inscription—In Broderlie Amite. Besides the parish kirk there is a dissenting meeting-house, and the inhabitants support two subscription libraries. Fairs or hiring days are held annually, in the months of April, May and November.
